STEINLE'S FLASK IS WHERE HE WANTS IT

SPEAKING OF PICTURES

Johnson's new "Heliolab" makes strange patterns
both by night and by day

Twilight travelers to Racine, Wis. last month noticed on its modest skyline what appeared to be an outside electrical coil, standing on end and lighted from within (left). What they were seeing was a striking new research tower which S.C. Johnson and Son, Inc., makers of wax products, had just added to their strikingly modern administration offices (LIFE, May 8, 1939). Designed by Frank Lloyd Wright, U.S. architecture's arbitrary dean, the tower is probably the world's tallest cantilever structure—a 153-foot outer shell of specially kilned brick bands and glittering Pyrex glass tubing laid horizontally like logs and chinked with synthetic rubber. Its heart is a central concrete pillar from which the floors, alternately square and circular, cantilever out without support from the walls. For this unorthodox, light-filled and space-efficient research laboratory, the 81-year-old Wright coined a new word, "Heliolab," designed most of its interior furnishings and even directed the placing of decorative objects—with one exception. Research Vice President J. Vernon Steinle, rebelling at Wright's ukases, insisted on placing one flower flask (above) where he wanted it.

← AT TWILIGHT the refraction caused by the glass tubing makes interior lights appear to curve inward.

IN SUNLIGHT tower takes on silky sheen (right). →
Wright had 24 kinds of brick made especially for it.

NURUMAN STILL FROWNS WHEN DAUGHTER USES AMERICAN COSMETICS

"WE'RE LIVING THE ECA WAY"

Since the plan of "Bay Marshall" a Turk's day includes baked beans, "Küçük Abner," democracy
by NERIN E. GUN

Only two-and-a-half years ago the most backward nation in the ECA "family" was Turkey. Today Turkey is the outstanding example of what ECA can accomplish. New port facilities, modern slaughterhouses and refrigeration plants, tractors, centrifugal pumps, veterinarian colleges and oil derricks (an over-all expenditure so far of $104 million) are transforming Turkey. Indeed, Turkey's wheat and corn production has increased so much that she is now being looked to as a possible "breadbasket of free Europe." Just as important as this economic resurgence is Turkey's demonstration of how a country, given the opportunity, can take up the ways of freedom. Last spring one-time Dictator Ismet İnönü held the first free elections in Turkish history and was tossed out by Celâl Bayar and a democratic administration. Turkey's new prosperity, because it stems from ECA aid, has produced some startling examples of "going American," especially among the upper-middle-class families who can now afford it. To learn how far this love for "Sam Amca" ("Uncle Sam") has gone, Nerin E. Gun, a Turkish foreign correspondent, returned to Ankara and lived for a month with the family of Civil Servant Kâmil Nuruman. Mr. Gun's report on the average day in the Nuruman home follows.

It was only a few years ago when things were quiet in the morning around the Nuruman household. Then there wasn't much for breakfast. Kâmil's wife Fayze would not let anyone talk about the news: the headlines were too depressing. Everyone ate breakfast quietly and left for work or school. Today the Nurumans are, as they say, "living the ECA way," and the transformation from somber quiet to frenetic activity is almost unbelievable. The household is awakened by the shrieks of 14-year-old Güzin taking her shower. She talked her father into installing this device when she discovered that in America everyone takes a cold shower in the morning. Güzin is still jumping when she gets to the breakfast table. There confusion reigns. The new radio must be turned on so Güzin can hear a special children's program just like the ones in the land of "Sam Amca." Twenty-five-year-old Cahid, the only son, stands before the sideboard mirror using, and mostly showing off, his new electric razor. Above the squeals of the radio and the hum of the razor Fayze is striving to keep housewifely order and at the same time deal with Ayşe, the family's maid, who is arguing that she can't cook the breakfast these children are demanding. Güzin and Cahid will eat nothing but American-type breakfasts. No more black olives and goat's cheese for them; they want cereal, fruit juice, bacon, eggs and (that amazing delicacy) waffles. But Ayşe is still arguing that she is committing a mortal sin when she touches pork. The maid retreats to the That's like keeping a quart of water around to put out a fire.

If you carry insurance, carry ENOUGH.

If it's fire insurance, figure the insurance on the basis of what it would cost you to rebuild today.

If it's liability insurance, figure that after some accident you may be sued and soaked for many, many thousands of dollars.

kitchen, where she gingerly puts the bread in the pop-up toaster, then points two fingers of her left hand at it while it ticks away. She considers machines like this the handiwork of the devil, and she is careful to fend off the evil eye each time the ominous ticking starts.

Some order is restored to the breakfast table by the time Selma, the Nuruman's 20-year-old daughter, glides downstairs. Selma would not think of arriving on time; no young girl does in America. Besides it takes time to apply all her new Hollywood cosmetics. Because she studies every American magazine she can buy and looks at the others in the library, she knows exactly how her make-up should be applied—thickly. Her arrival invariably brings a comment from her father, who still disapproves of her wearing slacks to breakfast. Selma answers that her father just isn't "in the groove"; everybody knows the daughter of the President of the U.S.—who must of course be a very conservative man—wears "pedal-pushers." That settles that argument until the next morning.

Fayze is happy to get her family out of the house, Kâmil to his job as a department director in the Ministry of Commerce and the children to their schools, so that she can study the American menus that keep Bette Davis, Joan Crawford and Gloria Swanson eternally young. When she goes to the market she knows what delicacies from far lands she wants: Boston baked beans in a can, beef that is corned; and she is ready to haggle with the grocer until he lowers his price a few cents. Not even the ECA could change this Turkish custom and, besides, the cost of living has risen so much in Turkey lately. Kâmil has had three raises because the Marshall Plan has started so many new government projects, but Fayze still has to save up her pennies for those American gadgets the children keep asking for. One thing she does not haggle about, though. After she has bought her groceries, she goes to the Ulus Square to buy a new "American beauty" utensil for her kitchen—a knife, can opener or nutcracker. Here she never questions the price because American products are "nylon," a new word in the Turkish vocabulary meaning durability combined with elegance. Fayze has to hurry because her afternoons, once peaceful mending sessions, are now a madhouse of bridge parties, courses at the nursery of the Society of the Protection of Childhood and meetings of the Turkish-American Women's Club.

By dinnertime, when the family assembles around the table again, Fayze is tired by her busy day and can hardly keep up with the conversation that is roaring around her. Cahid is telling anyone who will listen about the experiments he performed today in the laboratory of the university. When he graduates next summer he hopes to go to America to learn to be a qualified technical engineer. Cahid's voluble plans are drowned out, however, by an argument between Selma and Güzin over how to do the Charleston, and Selma has to be told to sit down when she tries to demonstrate what she means. Finally Kâmil tries to assert his authority by telling them all to quiet down, whereupon he reports some of his experiences at his Ministry of Commerce office.

His work is so much nicer now that the Americans are around. The old roads, virtually unimproved since the Romans built them, have now been replaced by long ribbons of concrete. Kâmil appreciates this because he has to travel a lot. His expense account is not so tight any more, because appropriations for the government projects are larger. And whenever he gets out into the country he marvels at the new ECA tractors. Once the farmers plowed behind oxen. Now many churn around on their new tractors, some of them even dashing onto the road to race the bus. When dinner is over, if it is the maid's day out, Fayze does the dishes. She was delighted to discover in one of those magazines that in America the men help with the dishes. This part of "Marshallization" Kâmil stubbornly opposes—so far. He was winning the battle until Fayze made another discovery about America: divorce is no shame. In fact she and her friends are beginning to think of it as an honor. An American divorcee married the King of England; another one married the son of the Aga Khan. Fayze was quick to use this threat, pointing out to Kâmil how easily a divorce can be obtained and how much alimony she thinks she would need.

"You know," she adds slowly, "I have a lawyer who studied in San Francisco. . . ."

Most evenings Selma's Yank friends come to call. At first Kâmil did not approve of this, but he soon found the Yanks were good listeners and always gave him American cigarettes. These cigarettes didn't hurt Kâmil's position at all when he presented a few to his boss in the morning.

But if no Yanks happen to call, Kâmil and Cahid listen to the radio. They listen first to the Voice of America, then to BCC, and then to the Moscow broadcasts. Then they turn the radio off and engage in a political discussion. But their political disagreements are few. Both are grateful to the U.S. for the help Turkey has received, especially because, unlike their former big allies, America asks so little of Turkey. They are extremely proud, and rightly so. They feel that it makes their country the outstanding example of how the plan of the good "Bay Marshall" can answer Russian charges of U.S. imperialism. And they are all the more proud of this because it is being accomplished right in Russia's back yard.

Late at night, when the family has gone to bed, you can hear the big B-29s roaring overhead. Fayze likes to let them lull her to sleep; this noise, that once meant danger, now means security. Sometimes, though, when Kâmil stays up a while to muse over his glass of raki, he realizes that even American-style democracy is not absolutely perfect. One of those nights he said to me: "Now our household is as tumultuous as a session of the new democratic National Assembly. Everyone has something 'up to date' that must be done. We must eat some new food combinations. We must get the newspaper that has the daily adventures of Küçük Abner ("Li'l Abner"). We must get a refrigerator, put a modern addition on the house. And it is just as if I were the new president, too. Nobody listens to my opinion any more."

WARY MAID still approaches the refrigerator gingerly. Nurumans will be paying for it for six years.

SNOBS

Sirs:

"Snobs" by Russell Lynes (LIFE, Nov. 20) is the most intelligent definition of humanity to date. . . . Delightful, enlightening and often humiliating, this should become a textbook in social education.

JOHN P. FRANKS

Piqua, Ohio

Sirs:

. . . The Rolls-Royce Snob to which Lynes refers is one of the more harmless of the many subvariants of the Car Snob. Stanley Steamer owners look down with immense disdain upon "gas" cars and constantly brag, "My 1909 Stanley trimmed a brand new Oldsmobile at a stoplight last Saturday." Still more exalted, in their own minds, are Mercer owners. The "L head" Mercer owners are bad enough, but with "T head" Mercer owners (the earlier type, 1910-1914), there is no living.

Personally I am a 50-hp, chain-drive Simplex Snob.

D. CAMERON PECK
President

Antique Automobile Club of America
Chicago, Ill.

Sirs:

Into what category does Russell Lynes fit the snob who reads LIFE to find errors, no matter how small?

MRS. H. W. DEPREE

Milwaukee, Wis.

● The Gimlet Eye or "nothing-ever-escapes-me" Snob.—ED.

Sirs:

. . . Then there is the snob who snobbishly writes in to LIFE to take issue with that greatest of snobs who "thinks he can define a snob"—but the greatest of all snobs is the silent type who would not think of writing but will turn to the next subject. . . .

JOERN J. OLSHAUSEN

LIPIZZAN'S LEAP

Sirs:

You describe the feat being performed by the Lipizzan stallion (Picture of the Week, LIFE, Nov. 20) as the ballotade. I think you are mistaken. It is a capriole. . . .

GORDON JOST

Harrisburg, Pa.

● The horse in LIFE's picture was performing a ballotade. To do a capriole he would have had to kick out his legs from the ballotade into the position shown below.—ED.

COLOMBIAN NAZIS

Sirs:

It was with the greatest surprise that I saw a series of photographs intended to demonstrate the existence of Nazi tendencies in Colombia (LIFE, Nov. 20). . . . The Colombian government is against all totalitarian regimes, be it rightist such as Nazism, or leftist as Communism. . . . That is why, in the present struggle, my government has not hesitated to place at the service of the U.N. a frigate of the Colombian navy and one thousand men of its regular army. . . .

Minister Counselor

SIEGEL'S COLOR PHOTOGRAPHS

Sirs:

I want to tell you how much I enjoyed the handsome color work of Arthur Siegel ("Modern Art by a Photographer," LIFE, Nov. 20). It is refreshing to see color photography used in such an imaginative and creative way.

I also want to tell you of my appreciation for the story of the Nile by Eliot Elisofon. This is a brilliant example of the use of the camera.

BEAUMONT NEWHALL
Curator

George Eastman House
Museum of Photography
Rochester, N.Y.

Sirs:

Are Siegel's pictures for sale? It would give us great pleasure to have a photograph like "Building in Winoona, Minn."

CORINNE WILLING

Forest Hills, N.Y.

● Mr. Siegel hopes soon to sell color prints for about $30. His address is 2025 N. Mohawk St., Chicago 14, Ill.—ED.

PHEASANT HUNT

Sirs:

Weary after a day's pheasant hunting (I earned my limit of three birds) I read "M. Auriol's Hunt" (LIFE, Nov. 20), where 488 pheasants were bagged in 3½ hours.

This so-called hunt must have been strenuous for the marksmen since it is evident the onslaught of birds would necessitate rapid fire in self-defense.

Who considers Duff Cooper to be "waiting alertly"? I'll wager an Iowa pheasant would be a light year away before being zeroed in by Mr. Cooper.

make it most unlikely for me to invest $300,000 in the story-telling ability of a young man whom I'd just met. Now, semiretired, I'd like to reassure my former associates that I have not yet reached that stage of mental disintegration. . . . My son, Robert Stillman, who has been associated with motion pictures for some 20 years, telephoned me at Miami Beach stating that he'd met a young producer who had some refreshing ideas, and that they had been discussing a partnership. I invited Stanley Kramer and my son to come to Miami Beach, where they related the story of Champion. Impressed, I loaned the money to the partnership.

ONCE MORE "WE GOT A HELL OF A BEATING"

In the bitter, 25-below-zero weather of North Korea last week a grim lot of U.S. troops and their U.N. allies ran into military disaster. The late General Joe Stilwell would have said about this one, as he said of Burma in 1942, "We got a hell of a beating." General Douglas MacArthur, no longer a victorious commander but a deeply harassed one, used loftier words: "This situation, repugnant as it may be, poses issues beyond the authority of the U.N.'s military command—issues which must find their solution within the councils of the U.N. and the chancelleries of the world." He meant that the Chinese Communist army's entry into the Korean war had changed everything. He called it "an entirely new war." When the Chinese exploded their first great offensive south of the Yalu River, the U.N.'s greatly outnumbered forces crumpled before the blow.

What had happened? The versions became as confused as the battle-front, but the main facts were these: On Nov. 24, after a lull of two weeks, General MacArthur launched a U.N. offensive to capture all of North Korea to China's Manchurian border. After flying to the front himself he predicted, at least in a jocular vein to subordinate officers, that "the boys . . . will be back for Christmas." At first the going was easy; then the Chinese sprang. Within a week the U.S. Eighth Army, on the north-western front, was split away from the X Corps on the northeast. The magnificent and battle-hardened U.S. 1st Marine Division was cut off with the Army's 7th. U.N. troops retreated through the recently captured North Korean capital, Pyongyang. U.S. intelligence obviously had been faulty again, and Tokyo headquarters rapidly raised its estimate of the new enemy strength from 200,000 to 500,000 Chinese.

The world's headlines started to cry "Crisis," but the world outside the U.S. was not visibly disturbed. A LIFE correspondent cabled from Paris, which was busy entertaining the King of Denmark and also having another French cabinet crisis: "The Korean war news hit France and most of Western Europe with all the explosive force of a wet dishrag dropped in Jell-o." But when President Truman told his weekly press conference that use of the atomic bomb had always been considered, all nations sat up and took notice. The French assembly pulled itself together to give Premier René Pleven's government a whopping vote of confidence. In Britain, where more than 100 members of Parliament rushed out to sign petitions against atomic war, Prime Minister Attlee hurriedly decided to fly to Washington for talks with Truman. Some in London thought he was carrying a plan devised by Winston Churchill, a plan to buy time from the Chinese Communists by compromise through U.N.

In the U.S. many Americans looked beyond the Chinese Reds to the ultimate enemy, Russia, and some took too much comfort in the knowledge of U.S. superiority in atomic weapons. As they looked to the war front (pp. 34-37) and saw their forces overwhelmed by the enemy, they looked also to the home front (pp. 42, 43) and, with a sinking feeling, began to see that the unpreparedness of 1941 was again a threat to free America's survival.

← MOVING INTO DANGER, U.S. TROOPS CROSS ICY STREAM ON FALLEN TIMBER

MAJOR CARROLL COOPER, cold and exhausted after three days and nights without sleep, led his 360-man task force on hopeless chase of Reds through Yalu gorges. After Reds escaped into Manchuria, Cooper said disgustedly. "To fight a war in these parts, you need a squad of lawyers traveling right with the infantry."

A SMALL TASK FORCE FIGHTS AND FREEZES ON FAR NORTH FRONT

Farthest north of all U.N. troops in Korea when MacArthur's offensive began was the U.S. 7th Division, which had reached the Yalu at Hyesanjin (see map, p. 38) on Nov. 21. Their job was to probe westward in near-Arctic weather after the Reds. A small task force, formed of a reinforced infantry company with some tanks, artillery and mortars in support, set out under 35-year-old Major Carroll Cooper. With the force went LIFE Photographer Hank Walker and LIFE Correspondent Roy Rowan.

"For three days," cabled Rowan, "this little task force shoved back a stubborn Communist band of 200 men who made a stand in the tiny village of Posong-ni. 'I want to get some of those bastards,' Major Cooper said tersely, 'and I don't mean dead either. If they are Chinese, I want to know how many more are ahead of us.'"

"From inside a tunnel Major Cooper grimly watched his assault platoon crawl forward across a burned-out bridge toward Posong-ni. It was deathly still in the town. Just ahead, but on the Manchurian side of a bend in the Yalu, was a farmhouse. As the first shells hit, a farmer and his wife dashed out of the house and burrowed into a nearby haystack. 'I guess,' said Major Cooper, 'the old geezer and his missus figure we've just declared war on China.'"

"We saw Major Cooper back at regimental command post that night. 'We got the town,' he said, 'but the gooks got away from us again. The road crosses over into Manchuria just a half mile past Posong-ni.'"

When the Chinese Reds arrived later in overwhelming force, Task Force Cooper became one of many outfits trying to break out of the powerful encircling pincers of the Chinese offensive.

DIGGING IN a few hundred yards south of Yalu River, U.S. troops use pickaxes instead of shovels to dig foxholes in frozen ground. Holes were protection more against subzero cold than fairly quiet enemy.

NATIVE OXEN and sleds are used by soldiers to drag lumber to cover tops of their foxholes. No fires could be built as enemy held the surrounding mountains.

STEAMING MACHINE GUN of Task Force Cooper fires down the road which parallels Yalu River. Water-cooled machine guns were always in danger of freezing.

WET SOLDIER of Task Force Cooper who fell into creek strips off clothes in shelter before they freeze.

enemy. Yalu winds between village and mortarmen who must fire across Chinese territory to hit target.

THANKSGIVING TURKEY, sent to front lines, is enjoyed by Sergeant Davis sitting on rubble pile.

FROZEN LONG-JOHNS are held up by Sergeant Cox of 7th Division artillery during a lull in fighting.

FOOTPRINTS ON THE YALU where it had frozen solid come from Manchurian side to Korea and were a warning to U.N. troops that Chinese Red agents or combat troops on patrol were on the move. Freeze-up of river canceled out the work of U.S. Air Force and Navy bombers in destroying bridges across the Yalu.

RED OFFENSIVE (black arrows) by last weekend had isolated U.S. X Corps in northeast and smashed around the right flank of Eighth Army lines in west.

SOME RETREAT, SOME ARE CUT OFF

The counteroffensive of the Chinese Communists, launched on Nov. 26, hit MacArthur's line in its center, weakly held by three South Korean divisions. Struck by at least five Chinese divisions, the center broke and a huge gap was torn in the U.N. line (map, above). The Reds, swinging down the Chongchon River, were stopped only when the British, Turks and U.S. 1st Cavalry Division came up from reserve at the critical moment. Their line bent but did not break. But with its right flank exposed, Eighth Army could only retreat and hope to form a line across the peninsula farther south. To form this line the divisions of X Corps were desperately needed but, spread through the mountains, two of them had been cut off from their supply port at Hungnam and were fighting for their lives.

WORRIED MACARTHUR leaves his Tokyo headquarters as news of disaster pours in. The general termed situation critical and serious but not yet hopeless.

RETREATING COLUMN led by a Sherman tank halts on road south while empty Army trucks by-pass it on their way north to pick up rear guards. Even though roads were jammed with vehicles, the Eighth Army was able to move fast enough to keep from being encircled by the Chinese and pinned against the sea.

SUPPLIES FOR TRAPPED MARINES are dropped after U.S. forces were surrounded near Changjin Reservoir. The Marines were soon forced to abandon their tent camps and fight their way south toward the coastal ports, suffering far heavier casualties than they took when they captured the reservoir last month.

ANGRY WORDS, BAD NEWS

Red China defies United Nations at Lake Success and an aroused capital braces to meet the crisis

The eyes of the country, drawn in horror to Korea, shifted anxiously back to Lake Success and Washington. At the U.N. the battle for peace was in the final rounds. Wu Hsiu-chuan, Red China's spokesman, had been invited to the U.N. to present his country's fantastic charge of U.S. "aggression" against Formosa. He came to the Security Council, which still hoped that China might wish a workable solution to the crisis. But as soon as Wu spoke, the country heard its worst fears realized. Wu delivered a shrill, hard, nearly two-hour diatribe in the best Moscow tradition. It left no apparent opening for compromise or conciliation and brought no hope that China preferred peaceful settlement to outright war. With little else left to do, the council put to a vote a six-power resolution ordering China out of Korea. Russia's Malik killed it methodically—with Russia's 47th veto. Next the case would go before the vetoless General Assembly.

In Washington the lame duck Congress was just back from vacation, in a mood of politics as usual and ready for a short, easy session. The news of the Chinese breakthrough brought a swift change. What was to have been a short briefing session by Dean Acheson turned into a warning of imminent war. The President called a series of extraordinary conferences with his high brass. At one he discussed with the National Security Council the problems of mobilization, the question of sending bombers into Manchuria and action to be taken with regard to the U.N. At another he conferred with willing leaders of both parties and sent them back to the Hill with a request for $18 billion in new war funds. At a press conference, when asked if use of the A-bomb had been considered, he said it had—but he didn't want to use it. When the resulting bald bulletins brought querulous protests from the rest of the Western world, he explained by adding that, like any weapon, the A-bomb has naturally always been under consideration. The flurry died down when MacArthur said he had not asked to use the A-bomb anyway. A more immediate worry was the problem of accelerating America's lethargic industrial mobilization (next page).

COMPARATIVE CHART brings earlier estimates (LIFE, Feb. 27, 1950) up to date. Using best available data, it shows U.S. mobilization has long way to go.

WHAT MOBILIZATION?

Industry waits for orders which are few and slow

If war came, how ready was the great U.S. industrial machine? Last week the answer to this question became as critical as a life preserver when a torpedo strikes. And the answer was: the U.S. wasn't ready at all.

The nation's capacity to produce had doubled since Dec. 7, 1941 and it had a huge team of veteran production men. But only a comparatively small number of them had received explicit orders or letters of intent, because Washington's planners had not yet made up their minds what the national defense objectives should be. Although the U.S. appropriated $30 billion for arms immediately after the outbreak of the Korean war, it had committed less than half that sum through orders. It was producing 100 million tons of steel a year (against 67 million in 1940), but virtually all was being channeled into civilian production for lack of military orders. The U.S. now had synthetic rubber, but some of the plants still were inactive; a new 1,500 Liberty ship fleet, but it was largely in moth balls; some designs for new planes and missiles but mostly on the drawing boards.

Above all this loomed the sickening fact that before weapons spew forth they must be blueprinted, factories converted, machine tools built and installed, work crews trained. Strikingly illustrating that was the Cadillac tank program (opposite page), begun last July, which may not produce its first tank before next July.

Time was not the only U.S. shortage. Manpower was short. As of last September a third of the nation's industrial areas had no labor surplus at all, and the draft had not yet begun taking deep bites. Power was short; it was estimated at year's end electric reserves would be a scant 8% instead of a safe 15%. And while the government was trying to stock-pile quantities of war-vital materials like manganese, cobalt, tin and nickel (which are obtained almost entirely from other countries), it was still permitting greater quantities of most of them to be used up by civilian production. There was no question that Congress would give Harry Truman the $18 billion that he asked last week for additional defense. The question was whether, once provided, it would be spent quickly and efficiently enough to overtake the enemy's tremendous head start (chart, above).

AUG. 28, 1950

FISHER BOMBER PLANT in Cleveland, whose 1,673,000 square feet of work space was used for building B-29 components in World War II, was selected for fulfilling General Motors' first major war contract. Its Cadillac division, which had built tanks before in World War II, was designated last July 21 to make $110 million worth of new light tanks. At that time Commodity Credit Corporation had 19½ million pounds of beans stored in it (above). Cadillac assigned a crack production team to the job. In response to a plant hiring announcement on Aug. 21, a crowd of 8,000 besieged the plant, so eager for war jobs that military police had to restrain them. Six hundred suppliers were alerted. Presently the beans were cleared, production lay-outs planned, tools ordered. But because of the inevitable lag between planning and production, much of the floor space last week still yawned empty (below) for machine tools that would not be available for weeks.

NOV. 30, 1950

SEPTEMBER

REACTIVATING CAMP in September machine at Breckinridge harvests the corn which farmers had grown on land leased from the government. Soldiers pitched in with machetes to speed up the process.

RESERVES began to come in for training on Sept. 19, four days after the camp had been made ready.

SELECTEES now arrive at rate of over 300 a day, but camp's capacity will not be reached for months.

ON DRILL FIELD selectees march to cadence, learning to form a company front. They constitute

2% of the trainees. At Breckinridge they get basic rifleman's training and then go on to a tactical unit.

2ND DIVISION'S ARMAMENT includes more than 2,000 radios, 4,000 vehicles and 20,000 weapons. Above are samples along with division commander, Maj. Gen. R. A. Robinson. On V left to right are a 3.5 bazooka, flame thrower, Browning automatic rifle, two M-1 rifles (one with grenade launcher), a carbine with grenade launcher, .45 pistol, field clothing, light and heavy machine guns, .50-cal. machine gun, 75-mm recoilless rifle. Off edge of V are rolls of wire, telephones, radios. In front of general is

MANPOWER IS LOW

The same bleak situation that exists in industrial mobilization also pervades military mobilization. In its current plan the U.S. will have produced by June 1951 only a handful of troops compared to those of China and Russia. It has not yet called up enough men and officers to fill its existing training centers. Camp Breckinridge (left) in Kentucky was reactivated in mid-September when the Army was permitted to accelerate slightly its mobilization program. Since then only 6,334 trainees have straggled into Breckinridge although the camp has the facilities to handle 22,000.

What makes the situation worse is the formidable length of time it takes to train and organize the manpower into divisions. The division is a sprawling complex of men and machinery, manned by from 18,000 to 20,000 troops, with a vast array of equipment ranging from shoelaces and sewing kits to thousands of weapons of all kinds and calibers. Even for a compact, efficient organization like the U.S. Marine Corps, the problem of molding these elements into a mobile fighting force is a tremendous job. At Camp Lejeune, N.C. the 2nd Marine Division is now in training. Staffed by regular officers, it has a high proportion of reserves, most of them World War II veterans. Its recruits have had a preliminary but notoriously effective eight-week workout at boot camp in Parris Island, S.C. More, the division has stepped up its training program to an emergency status. But, even under these conditions, the time necessary to ready the 2nd stands at a minimum of five months from the day that the last battalion of recruits was marched into the camp.

THE PROSPECT IS WAR

THE FINAL INITIATIVE IS LEFT TO OUR REAL ENEMY, BUT IN ASIA WE STILL HOLD SOME TRUMPS

The news is of disaster. World War III moves ever closer. War with the armies of Communist China is a fact. Our forces in Korea are caught in a cruel trap. Our leaders at home are frightened, befuddled and caught in a great and inexcusable failure to marshal the strength of America as quickly and as strongly as they ought to have done in recent months (pp. 42, 43). Our principal allies in the U.N. are uncertain, unready, anxious to buy the appearance of peace at almost any price if only the enemy will make a deal. Our underlying policies, in the U.N. and in Asia, are exposed for what they have always been—fallacies born of the enormous fallacy that the Communists of Asia are not our enemies. Talk of using the A-bomb is heard as it has never been heard before.

The cold voice of hate

So says the news. But, in this hour of mortal choice, all that is not the heart of the news. The heart of the news is that at last we know—we really know—our enemy.

We know that our enemy is the Soviet Union. We know that the Chinese Communist armies assaulting our forces in Korea are as truly the armies of the Soviet Union as they would be if they wore the Soviet uniform. Maybe most of us thought that we knew this before. It has been said before. But never as it was said last week, by President Truman in Washington and by his spokesmen at Lake Success, with the knowledge and the certainty forced upon us all by the facts of Korea and by the enemy's cold voice of hate and purpose at the U.N. Overnight a little stranger named Wu, the leader of the Communist delegation from Peking, did for us what we could never quite do for ourselves. He made us see and acknowledge the truth about the Communists of Asia. With a single speech to the Security Council (pp. 40, 41), he laid naked the total enmity of Chinese Communism, its total purpose to seize all Asia, its total identity with Soviet Communism and its total dedication to the Soviet program of world conquest. Let thanks go out to General Wu Hsiu-chuan of Peking, who put it on the line for all to see.

For all to see? President Truman, naming our enemy and saying there would be no surrender, spoke as if he saw it. Secretary Acheson, sponsor and practitioner of the fallacies now exposed, permitted the Americans at Lake Success to speak as if they saw it. Our pallid Allies, the British, previously so sure that peace could be bought from the Communists in Asia, seemed to understand now that only time could be bought—maybe.

Whether our own leadership is equal to the task remains to be seen. If there be any among our leaders who still refuse to perceive the naked facts of conflict, let them go now. If they do not go, let them be driven out by dismissal, by impeachment, by any means required to fit our government for the struggle abroad and for the effort which must be made at home. If our Allies believe that time may be bought, let them try. But if they refuse to perceive the naked facts, if they propose again to buy the peace that cannot be bought, let them be left to the compelling pressure of events. Whatever our Allies may propose, the anti-Communist alliance depends as never before upon American power, American purpose and American leadership. If all three are provided and asserted in full measure, the alliance will not fail.

A gamble for time

Having recognized our enemy, what then? The answer offered by President Truman is, in effect: we do not let our recognition of the enemy draw us into unlimited war, which means atomic war, with the Soviet Union now. Instead we play for time to marshal our power and face the enemy where he has chosen to strike us—in Asia. No more than this may be expected of our government and of our Allies now. Granting this, let no one forget the immense gamble inherent in this position and let no one toy with any illusions about it. It is not a matter of morals, this decision to leave to the enemy the initiative in using the ultimate power of the A-bomb for ultimate purposes. It is a matter of fallible calculation, the calculation of our leaders that the A-bomb cannot be conclusive and that the principal effect of our using it now would be to start the final war before we and our Allies are set to win it. If this calculation is correct, any lesser use of the A-bomb taking unlimited risk for limited purposes, would be an inconceivable folly.

The immediate theater is of course Korea, and it may soon be mainland China. There is talk of refusing to undertake war with China, of refusing to "fight the proxies." All men of good will abhor the thought of war with China. But at this juncture Americans must keep the facts straight. First, there are no proxies in the armies of Communism. Second, we do not "want" war with China. The Communists force war upon us. Until and unless they cease to do so, there will be no possibility of peace with China. These are the facts, and the prospect is war.

We face the prospect with fear, a fear that is justified by all that we have been told of the Chinese Communists. We think of war with their mass armies as a profitless and fatal drain upon our capacity to fight elsewhere. The visible facts of Korea, past and present, would seem to justify these fears. To Americans, fed for so many years upon the pap of Communist invincibility and given little or no hint that war with Communist China does not necessarily entail involvement with its mass armies, any suggestions to the contrary may seem to be wishful optimism of the worst sort. Nevertheless there is reason to believe that the fears are unfounded, that we can sustain any war the Chinese Communists force upon us without being fatally weakened on other fronts. To do so will require a firmness of choice, a courage of decision, a kind of intelligence sadly missing from our past performance in Asia. But it will require nothing that is impossible for us if our leadership is up to the high mark now required.

Whether our forces continue to fight in Korea will be decided by events. In any case we must wage any war against Communist China principally from the greatest strategic asset we possess in Asia—the perimeter of islands provided by Japan, Okinawa, Formosa and the Philippines. Air attack and naval blockade based upon these positions have their limitations, of course; very probably they cannot be decisive. But these positions and the warfare to be waged from them also have advantages. Above all, and provided that we have the sense and courage to exercise it, we and not the enemy will possess the saving power of choice as to where we fight, what enemy moves and what situations we do and do not undertake to meet. Secondly—and this is the point for worried Americans and their military commanders to grasp now—mainland China under any regime is peculiarly vulnerable to air attack and to air and naval blockade. Parts of its internal economy rest to an important extent upon its coastal ports and communications, and upon the few thin lines of rail and river transport which connect the coast with the interior, South China with North China. In the judgment of authorities, military and civilian, who have studied the possibilities and the limitations of this form of warfare, the internal structure and military capacity of Communist China can be crippled and conceivably may be shattered by the kinds of action open to us from our perimeter. Finally, any war with Communist China will not be waged by us alone, nor by air and sea alone. There are the Chinese Nationalists and their sizable military forces on Formosa, toward whom our policy of restriction and hostility must inevitably change. There is in China the makings of a formidable resistance to the Communists—unassessed, untried, dispersed and ill-supported—but nonetheless there. It has been ignored, discouraged and all but starved out because of a general reluctance to "reactivate" the civil war which the Communists supposedly won in 1949. Given war with Communist China, it is now for us to recognize these anti-Communist fighters, support them and guide them and find out whether—as they claim and as some of our best observers in Asia believe—they can deprive the Communists of South China.

Our strength is at home

The American people and many of our leaders are not prepared for these possibilities and this warfare. But the warfare is upon us; the possibilities lie before us. We must never forget that the real war is with our real and now recognized enemy. We must never forget that what we can do in Asia and elsewhere depends first of all on what we do at home to prepare for the ultimate war that our real enemy seems determined to force upon us. Let no man say that whatever may be in store is too much for our country and for all who look to us now.

FACE OF VICTORY

Even when the President went to the Army-Navy game last week he could not forget the threat that overhung him and the nation. The guards at every trestle en route had been doubled. Air patrols circled the stadium. Through most of the game Mr. Truman was preoccupied. But when Navy stopped the last Army drive, clinching its 14-2 victory, Harry Truman, an old Army man who had been sitting on the winning side, leaned forward and smiled broadly.

STOLEN CHILDREN COME BACK HOME

Yugoslavs return 21 young Greeks

In the northern Greek city of Salonika, one evening late in November, a procession of cars and buses bearing officials of the International Red Cross and 21 Greek children rolled to a halt outside a children's home. Taken inside, the pale and excited youngsters were fed a nourishing dinner of thick rice and meat soup, chunks of boiled beef, olives and oranges, then put to bed. The next morning came toys from the Red Cross, candies, gift packages of food from America, a promise of new shoes; later came doctors and nurses to check them over. Then came the most exciting moment. One by one the children were led from the dining hall to the open arms of their rejoicing parents, who were seeing them for the first time in two years.

These were the first children to be returned to Greece since some 25,000 were kidnapped by the Communists and taken into Albania, Bulgaria or Yugoslavia during the Greek civil war. They were sent home by Yugoslavia, which is starting to renew its ties with Greece. Yugoslavia alone is believed still to hold nearly 9,000 children in its camps, and the joy felt by the few lucky families at Salonika was overshadowed in hundreds of Greek villages by the realization that so far only 21 children had come back.

Some of the 21, as young as 4, speak only Serbian now. One youngster asked for a red flag. One spoke proudly of his Yugoslavian toys: "Airplanes, tanks and guns with red stars." In the course of two years their captors had turned many into complete kindergarten Communists.

MAN, BEAST AND BIRD FLY IN TERROR AS CHARLES ADDAMS VERSION OF HERO IN SONG "THE THING" MAKES MOMENTOUS DISCOVERY IN A BOX ON BEACH

ALL AMERICA IS BEATING OUT HORROR SONG CALLED "THE THING"

The headless notes on the musical staff above, which indicate the beat of a drum, represent the tuneless moment that in turn represents the nameless subject of the currently most popular song in America. For want of any other title it is called The Thing. It is devoted to an object so comically mysterious and sinister that LIFE felt obliged to request Horror Cartoonist Charles Addams to illustrate it (above).

As all Americans but a few solitary shepherds, madmen and philosophers know by now, The Thing is found by a luckless man on a beach. In successive stanzas he displays it hopefully to a storekeeper, his wife, a beggarman and St. Peter. They all turn from it in disgust, but he goes on singing about it to the tune of an old off-color folk song called The Tailor's Boy.

In its present form the song is the brainchild of Charles Grean, whose title is Manager of Popular Artists and Repertory at RCA Victor. First played on the air last month, it climbed up to the Hit Parade in a record-breaking four weeks. Recordings are being sold currently at the rate of 30,000 a day, biggest for Victor since My Reverie (1938), and it is already being translated into French and the Scandinavian languages.

TWO MEXICAN FARMHANDS LEAN ON THEIR SHOVELS AS DELL CITY'S PRECIOUS WATER FLOWS FROM IRRIGATION DITCH (FOREGROUND) INTO ALFALFA FIELD

A TEXAS TOWN HITS WATER—AND CELEBRATES

Down in the dusty corner of west Texas between El Paso and the Carlsbad Caverns there was a stretch of land so hard and dry and flat, so overrun with ill-tempered rattlers and lop-eared jacks that even a Texan would admit it was not much good for anything. On this arid land grew some mesquite and greasewood and not much else. That was four years ago. Last fortnight, plunk in the center of what had been a desert, the 1,000 citizens of a thriving new town called Dell City opened a new highway to the outside world. Over it, to the markets and to the freight lines, will travel their season's bumper crops—alfalfa, melons, beans, squash, cucumbers, okra, onions and tomatoes and 7,000 bales of upland and long-staple cotton. Dell City is now a booming agricultural center with 12,000 acres under cultivation and 50,000 more under way. For the drillers at Dell City had brought in not oil, which is what usually produces a boom in Texas, but water—plenty of water from a vast underground reservoir fed by the Guadalupe, Cornudas and Sacramento mountains. Already 57 deep wells are pumping, and more wells are being drilled daily.

This change from desert to irrigated garden started only four years ago when three Texans bought a 60,000-acre ranch, planning to graze 1,000 cattle on its barren land. They drilled five wells and struck quantities of water. Guarding the secret of their bonanza as if it were a vein of gold, they quietly bought up adjoining ranches until they held 100,000 acres. Then they set up a land office and waited for the customers. Land-hungry farmers came by the hundreds. By the end of 1948, 8,000 acres had been sold. By last week there were 36,000. Big new tracts will get the plow next spring. Now Dell City boasts a boosters' club and a boastful sign (left). "Just wait," said the land office custodian last week, "till you see this li'l old town 10 years from now."

THE NEW HIGHWAY (right), a two-lane asphalt road, replaces bumpy dirt ruts which once connected Dell City with the Carlsbad-El Paso highway. Here one of the first cars to travel it leaves the city behind.

DUSTY BEEF is rushed from sizzling barbecue pit (left) to dusty spectators standing behind the ropes.

DUST AND DANCING OPEN THE NEW ROAD

As often happens in Dell City, there was a sand storm when the road was opened. A gritty wind whistled down the bare main street, shook the town's tent colony and all but ruined the outdoor barbecue which celebrated the new road. The people took this with good humor. They heard a sermon by the pastor, rode the merry-go-round, dusted off their cooked beef and applauded the jokes of an imported master of ceremonies ("She was pure as the driven snow, but she drifted"). Then a visiting speaker praised the pioneer spirit which had built a boom town out of a wilderness.

Dell City is a frontier town with some new twists. A hundred and fifty of its families live in tents, but there are three landing strips, and sometimes tent pegs double as tie-downs for airplanes. There is no electrical system; some houses have power plants, but most are lighted by kerosene. Cooking is done on modern stoves with butane gas. There is no formal government and no jail, and farmers double as sheriff's deputies on Saturday nights, hauling their prisoners by car to Sierra Blanca, 65 miles away. There is one carpenter, J. B. Brown, who has been working steadily seven days a week since last spring and is the most sought-after man in town. "I've been here nine months," he says, "and I ain't bought a beer yet, but I've had plenty."

ON MERRY-GO-ROUND called "The Octopus," Dell City's children whirl through dust at barbecue celebration. The city built a new school for them this year; there is also a church and a movie theater.

DELL CITY'S FOUNDERS, R. L. Merrill and C. W. Voyles (seated behind desk) and E. L. Stone (standing), discuss a drilling deal with two east Texans.

DETERMINED SQUARE DANCERS prance through their paces in an exhibition on an outdoor dance floor in spite of the sand and dust and high wind.

Britain's M.P.s now are given old tradition and new comfort

In May 1941 Nazi bombs destroyed the 90-year-old House of Commons, and Commons had to hold its sessions in the House of Lords. This fall, however, the M.P.s came back to their own house rebuilt on the site of the old. Beneath traditional appearance the members found new, modern comforts. The benches are still straight and narrow, but now they are cushioned with soft foam rubber. Light streams from clear glass windows which replace the almost opaque old panes, and amplifiers in the seats make speeches audible to the last backbenchers. Heated metal strips embedded in the floor along the seats keep the members' feet warm, and thermostats raise or lower the temperature according to the number of members present. The air-conditioning engineers say, "We aim at producing conditions approximating to those on a fine spring day."

RELAXING IN HER BOUDOIR, Argentina's first lady combs out her luxuriant golden-blond hair. Evita usually wears hair in a coil at her neck, on gala occasions has it dressed in curls.

Eva Perón

A FIRST LOOK AT THE PRIVATE LIFE OF A CONTROVERSIAL FIRST LADY

The lovely lady fixing her hair in the picture above is one of the most powerful and capricious, hated and beloved women in the world. As the wife of Dictator-President Juan Domingo Perón, Eva Duarte Perón, Argentina's 31-year-old first lady, is both a legend and a mystery. Although a redoubtable public figure, she has gone to great lengths to guard her private life and to suppress her personal history. Now, on this and the next four pages, LIFE presents, for the first time in the U.S., photographs of Señora Perón's home life with her husband, and on page 74 Correspondent Robert Neville tells the story of her enormous influence in Argentina today.

A BREATH OF PARIS, a gown designed for her in the French capital, is shown by Señora Perón with the help of maid Irma. Nearly all her gowns are imported.

A TRAY OF GLITTER holds Evita's attention. Trays contain part of hoard of jewels which Argentines claim is largest owned by any woman since Cleopatra.

HATS BY THE DOZEN await Señora Perón's choice and pleasure. Three large rooms, lined with immense cupboards, are needed to house her furs, suits, hats and shoes. Each year a special "couturier envoy" is sent to Paris to bring back the best work of great designers. Evita often wears an evening gown only once.

A TRIFLE OF MINK, an Azur blue coat which she says has only one duplicate in world, is admired by Señora Perón, whose wardrobe includes a variety of furs.

A HINT OF FRAGRANCE completes her preparations for day. She brought back to Argentina from her 1947 tour through Europe gallons of fine perfumes.

THE PERONS GET READY FOR A NIGHT OUT

PATIENT DICTATOR stands by while her maid puts finishing touches to his wife's toilette. Like most husbands General Perón was dressed and ready first.

ELEGANT GENERAL risks dog hair on his spectacular dress uniform to cuddle poodle, Tambour, which, he says proudly, "has already won one first prize."

PLAYFUL POODLES bark goodnight from top of grand piano. The black poodle, Tambour (left), is Perón's pet, while Evita favors Bonito, the white one.

FAITHFUL POODLES escort General and Señora Perón to the principal entrance of the presidential residence, where they await the official limousine.

WISTFUL POODLES, back on their piano-top perch, look sadly after their departed friends. The busy Peróns find very little time to play with their pets.

THE FINAL GLORY for Señora Perón's costume comes as maid pins medals (including the Legion of Honor) across the bodice of her gown, which was made

How Evita Helps Run Argentina

by ROBERT NEVILLE

EVA DUARTE PERÓN is a woman committed with rare intensity to everything and everybody she believes in. The person in whom she believes most fervently (next to herself) is her husband, and in a public speech she once declared with sincerity what to her is an elementary political law: "Those who oppose General Perón cannot feel like Argentines, cannot act like Argentines, cannot possibly be Argentines."

While one of the indisputable facts about Evita is her genuine confidence that Juan Domingo Perón is an indisputably great man, it is equally a fact that she herself provides a rough 75% of the nerve and force of the man's regime. Perón has assimilated a lot of important-sounding social theories; he uses polysyllabic words and quotes famous authors familiarly in his resonant public speeches. All this duly impresses his wife. But Perón is also given to hemming and hawing in chronic indecision. This is where Evita functions best: she knows precisely what they both want and never lets him forget it for long.

Husband and wife, in this respect, stand in striking contrast. Both during and after Perón's spectacular climb to power, when he has had flutterings of timidity in the face of opposition, it has been Evita who has acted boldly—either calling out the descamisados (the poor; literally, "shirtless ones") to howl down the opposition or calling in some obstreperous army officers for a tongue-lashing. For all his authoritarian ways, Perón sometimes has quibbled about arresting opponents or expelling critical deputies from the congress. He frets a good deal about the constitution. Evita, who has probably never read the constitution, acts without such fidgeting. Shackled by the red tape of his own government, Perón has been known to exclaim in despair, "These bureaucrats!" Evita has no trouble with bureaucrats, for the habit of instant obedience of her instructions is an occupational reflex of Argentine officialdom. For all these reasons, it is not the ingratiating general but his glamorous wife who is at once most loved and most loathed in Argentina today.

Evita did not, to put it mildly, get where she is overnight nor by the easy expedient of marrying a presidential candidate. Her path to power has been tortuous—a route on which a less purposeful and gritty person would have early become lost. Today the poor, ill-educated little girl, born out of wedlock, who has climbed to such magnificent heights, has decreed that the meandering line of her ascent be screened from public view. Though roughly half the files of the government's information ministry bulge with material devoted to Evita, no line of it speaks of where she was born, how she passed her childhood, what she did before becoming her country's first lady. Evita herself has never admitted publicly that she was in movies or radio, and even prints of the films in which she once labored through secondary roles have been scrupulously withdrawn from circulation. So, unless one were to believe that, Minervalike, Evita sprang fully grown onto her present gorgeous stage, the facts of her life must be found outside official archives.

Evita was born 31 years ago last May 7 in the small pampas town of Los Toldos. (Recently, for the Argentine "Who's Who," she has modified her age to 28.) Her mother was Juana Ibarguren, the handsome daughter of a coachman; her father was Juan Duarte, a small landowner who had deserted his legal wife. Of the one son and four daughters Doña Juana bore Duarte, the last was Eva, and all were illegitimate.

The Duarte children suffered a severe social stigma. When her father died, the funeral was held from his legal household, and the children of Doña Juana, while permitted to attend, were forced to stand in the back of the room. A schoolmate recalls that "nice little girls were not allowed to play with the Duarte girls." Even when Doña Juana took her brood to the larger town of Junín, after Duarte's death, life was hard and there was little money.

When she was 16, Evita, who had endured eight years of school but had shown little interest except in theatrical affairs, fled the pampas and its bitter memories. She came to Buenos Aires to "go on the stage." Life in the lower levels of the capital's theater world was harsh and tough, and Evita's acting talents were few and modest. But she had striking good looks and an ability to make friends in high places.

When, in 1943, her acquaintanceship reached into the politically up-and-coming "colonels' clique," her employer at Radio Belgrano, where she was a minor actress, upped her salary from a niggardly 150 pesos (then about $45) to an encouraging 1,500 pesos monthly. When she began to be seen in the company of Colonel Juan D. Perón, who was slated to be war minister and nobody knew what else, Evita got the biggest roles she had ever played. She appeared, at a fabulous $7,500 per month, in the title roles of a series of radio dramatizations of the lives of such historical figures as Lola Montez, Empress Carlotta of Mexico, Catherine the Great and Lady Hamilton.

In 1945 Evita's career as a radio actress came to an end. On Oct. 21 of that year she and Perón were married in a secret civil ceremony. She was 26 and her widower groom was 50. After a public religious ceremony at La Plata on Dec. 10, Eva emerged as a spirited campaigner for her husband, who was then seeking the presidency. He won handily.

Evita solves some social problems

UPON becoming Argentina's first lady in 1946, Evita's first tasks were some social problems of a personal kind. There was Nini Marshall, the country's outstanding radio performer, who once thought it was fun to mimic Actress Eva Duarte at slick parties; and there was Libertad Lamarque, Argentina's best movie actress, who had acted surly toward Evita on a number of occasions. For both these ladies work conditions became suddenly tough—and finally Nini left for Spain, Libertad for Mexico.

Much more serious was the problem of the Society of Beneficence, a kind of community chest running virtually all the country's hospitals, orphanages and charities. The names of the women on the society's board were a roll call of the nation's oldest and richest families. By tradition these "Ladies of Beneficence" always invited the country's first lady to become their honorary president. Now they agitatedly asked themselves how they could possibly invite that woman. They didn't. Evita excoriated "those dirty old hags of the oligarchy!" and soon there followed a presidential decree retiring the "ladies" from further charity management on the grounds of maladministration.

Starting his regime in 1946, President Juan Perón had no intention of making his wife a full-fledged partner in government, but he did appreciate Evita's energy and decisiveness. As an outlet for both, he gave her some work to do at the ministry of labor. Of such casual decisions and their unforeseen results, Argentine history has been made.

Within a few weeks the minister of labor had become a virtual messenger boy and Evita was running the show. Far from being a rattle-brained blonde, Evita soon showed herself to be a serious-minded young woman with keen political sense and purpose. She worked a frantic dawn-to-midnight routine. Her interviews, with everybody from diplomats to butchers, from ministers to chorus girls, began to run into the hundreds daily. Her public meetings, including taxicab drivers' rallies and assemblies of beer workers, could soon be counted by the dozen.

By happy coincidence the times were such that Evita had a golden chance to do much more for the workers of the Argentine than shake their hands. These days the government was buying up private utilities—railroads from the British and telephones from the Americans—and so tens of thousands of workers (and voters) were becoming new government employees. Good politics dictated good wage rises, and Evita was lavish. When the railroad workers asked for a general 40% raise, Evita declared, "I think they should get 50%," and they did. When the telephone workers started bargaining by asking for a 70% raise while really hoping for 30%, Evita saw that they got 70%.

Quickly, the unions and Evita displayed a real and mutually rewarding affinity for one another. She encouraged them to bring their wage disputes to her for arbitration, usually giving them all they asked and often a little more for good measure. Meanwhile, at union gatherings throughout the country, Evita was madly acclaimed as labor's patroness. Gaudy posters everywhere began to hail her as the "Standard Bearer of the Workers." No longer did people shout simply "Perón! Perón!" Now the cry was "Perón! Evita! Perón and Evita!" Carried by the tide of feeling, the once proudly independent General Confederation of Labor became a virtual auxiliary of the Peronista party. The president confided to a friend happily and truthfully, "Evita deserves a medal for what she's done for labor. She's worth more to me than any five ministers."

If that was accurate, what Evita did in charity work was probably worth another five. With the starched Society of Beneficence out of the way, she started her own "Social Aid Foundation of María Eva Duarte de Perón" with an initial outlay of $2,100 of her own in it. Within two years the foundation was collecting and spending at a monthly rate of some $12,000. Her sources of revenue were many and rich. Public employees naturally contributed regularly. All labor contracts stipulated that one half of the first month's rise in pay (usually won for them by Evita herself) must go to her Social Aid Foundation. In addition the unions fast acquired the habit of passing the hat for Evita. Just before last Christmas the railroaders, for example, came through with a handsome check of about $1.3 million for her.

A butler bows to charity cases

WHAT Evita does with her charity is not only strictly her own business (she makes no public accounting, of course) but is also a very de luxe kind of charity. Her "Hostels for the Aged," scattered about Buenos Aires, provide elderly destitutes with luxury accommodations for limited periods. A butler bows low to receive the new arrival; a servant obsequiously waits upon him (or her) in a beautifully furnished bedroom; waiters see to every wish in an elaborately appointed dining room. The "Home for Working Women" that Evita has built in downtown Buenos Aires is the swankiest hotel, bar none, in town. Here, for a very nominal rate and brief periods, selected working women are grandly accommodated in plushly carpeted rooms with rich brocade draperies, built-in radios, colored tile baths and such quaintly lovely touches as a fancily shaped atomizer on a handsome dresser. "Obviously," one diplomat's wife remarked, "it's the perfect picture of the room Evita herself used to dream of having."

Evita's fondness for charity in the grand manner was displayed by the vacation she gave last summer for some 600 boys chosen from the poorest, meanest hovels in the country. The boys were taken to Mar del Plata, were lodged in a fine hotel, were fed all the goodies they could consume, were entertained continually at swimming, games and movies and, at the end of their two weeks, dispatched back to their dirty hovels. This is not the professional welfare worker's way to conduct charity, but it is Evita's way.

Day in and day out Evita's audiences give her endless opportunities to help the needy as she feels they should be helped. In these interviews she is at her most decisive and effective. They go like this:

A young schoolteacher from a rural district comes to tell Evita that she's afraid the roof in her schoolhouse is going to cave in and injure her pupils. She has written a series of vain appeals to the authorities. Evita gets the minister of education on the phone, snaps, "See that the roof of this girl's school is repaired immediately."

A dancer arrives to explain that she was hired away from a good job in São Paulo, Brazil on the promise that she would be the featured player at 500 pesos weekly at the nightclub Tabaris. Instead she has been put to work as the bar hostess at 200 pesos weekly. Evita calls the mayor of Buenos Aires. "By tomorrow night I want this girl to have top billing at the Tabaris," says Evita. "And she is to get 500 pesos a week."

There's Pepe, now, who comes from far-off Catamarca. His father is suffering from stomach tumors and needs an immediate operation which can be done only in Buenos Aires, and the family has no money. Immediately Evita calls the minister of air to order an air ambulance for the next morning. She phones the minister of health, "Have an ambulance at the airport tomorrow morning and arrange for hospitalization and an operation for this man's father." Then she turns to beaming Pepe. "You'll probably need some money if you're going to stay in Buenos Aires during your father's operation," she says, and she deals out a half dozen 50-pesos notes.

To Pepe, to the dancer, to the schoolteacher and to the thousands like them, the disinterestedness of Evita's politics and the soundness of her economies are academic issues. She helps. That is enough. Let the wry and witty rich smirk at the propaganda posters that proclaim Evita "The Madonna of the Humble" and "The Lady of Hope." Their laughter never fed a hungry man.

Evita's philanthropic warmth vanishes immediately when she finds herself embroiled in intramural political warfare within her husband's government. No field could be more remote from her designated interests than foreign affairs; yet here one finds two of the sternest lessons in how stiff Evita can be in a fight.

Her gravest feud was with Foreign Minister Juan A. Bramuglia. The clash had a number of isolated, petty provocations all revolving around the fact that the foreign minister believed himself competent, without benefit of Evita's guidance, to be foreign minister. Because Bramuglia's capability matched his honesty, he was a tough opponent. Evita's main tactic was simple and deadly: she ordered a boycott of Bramuglia's name in all Peronista newspapers—even while he was president of the United Nations Security Council, when he visited the U.S., even when he returned to Argentina to be greeted at the dock personally by Perón himself. The press ban at one point went so far that editors were scissoring Bramuglia's figure out of group pictures. The campaign was as effective as it was naked. It all got so on Bramuglia's nerves that he finally resigned.

Equally effective were the tactics she used against the Count of Motrico, Franco Spain's ambassador to the Argentine. At a time when neither country had any friends anywhere, Spain and Argentina abrazed each other in close commercial and cultural relations. The able count wheedled some $350 million worth of wheat and meat out of Argentina—but he injudiciously boasted that Spain was paying for them largely with medals and decorations for the Peróns. He also began to gossip too glibly about Evita, and embassy servants reported what he said. Evita arranged a little party for the count, inviting him to her office and keeping him waiting a couple of hours. Then she arranged that he could not fail to eavesdrop on one of her tirades against both the count and Spain. "What dirty old obscenity of an ungrateful Spaniard!" was the purport of her remarks as the count entered her office. In confusion he quickly retired. And until General Francisco Franco named a new ambassador, some 20 ships laden with wheat for hungry Spain were held at anchor in the Plata River.

Evita has changed considerably since becoming first lady. For one thing, she dresses a lot better, which is not surprising in view of the $40,000 or more a year that she spends with the ranking designers of Paris. Evita buys up to a dozen dresses a year from each of the four or five top Paris designers alone, depending on the collections. (Last spring the orders included five dresses from Balmain, three each from Dior, Fath and Rochas.) Her jewelry and furs are on a matching scale. Over the years, too, her hairdos have undergone changes that tell a lot about the wearer. The long, fluffy, flip-pant bob with curls which she used to favor has gradually given way to the present hairdress drawn severely from the brow back toward a low chignon. It gives Evita the appropriate look of a woman of purpose—and one who has, of recent years, gained greatly in poise and assurance.

Some newcomers to Buenos Aires are surprised to see Evita up and about at 8 or 9 a.m., attending a street cleaners' rally, dressed superbly in a Dior creation and adorned with Van Cleef jewelry. But here, as in so many cases, her political instincts are sound. To many a descamisado, Señora Perón is Cinderella come to life, and should she not dress accordingly?

Along with Evita, the whole family from Los Toldos has prospered in the last three years. Thanks, of course, to her, brother Juancito is Perón's private secretary, also one of the big operators on the Buenos Aires stock exchange. One of her brothers-in-law is a customs official. Two others, who died recently, were a senator and a supreme court justice. Evita's mother lives quietly and modestly in Buenos Aires. Elisa, the wife of the late senator, is the only one besides Evita who has shown any aptitude for politics, and that only in a small way: she is the political boss of Junín, the old home town. Unlike Evita, who never sets foot in the place, Elisa frequently goes back to enjoy the pleasure of lording it over the town's once ruling families.

Evita is much too steeped in her work to do much strutting. She rarely goes out at night and, in fact, despite her wardrobe, generally leads a rather Spartan life. Her home life is austere, even though the president's two official homes and his one big private home are quite comfortable and big. The time is long past when Evita yearned to be accepted by society, to be recognized by the "best people." She no longer cares. She needs and asks for no false props. She has a stature and a purpose of her own. Be it good or ill, her will rules the Argentine.

GOGGLE-EYED WITH GREED, TREE FROG CLUTCHES RIM OF JAR AND REACHES FOR MEAL WORM. THREE MEAL WORMS OR ONE GRASSHOPPER IS A WEEK'S DIET

THE TREE FROG IS A COMICAL PET

Except for small boys, almost nobody ever has any desire to keep frogs around the house as pets. But Robert Hermes of Buffalo, N.Y., who is 49 years old, has had as many as 27 tree frogs bouncing around his home at one time, and he insists they make wonderful pets. He captures them on spring nights around the edges of ponds, locating them by their mating songs and then blinding them by shining a flashlight in their eyes. As pets, tree frogs, which vary in size from less than one-half inch to more than five inches in length, are completely unaffectionate and unable to recognize even members of the family. After a few days in captivity they hardly ever sing, producing no more than an occasional croak or chirp. But they have comical eating habits which more than make up for any emotional shortcomings. When first captured and placed in glass jars they are timid, and Hermes gives them their weekly meal on a white tablecloth so that they can see their food. But once accustomed to their home they grow confident and can be fed by hand, their greedy eyes bulging and mouths gaping (above). A sticky tongue hauls the food into the mouth. Then by depressing its eyes, the tree frog forces the food into its stomach. Hermes has found meal worms, which he raises himself, and grasshoppers to be the best diet, but tree frogs often bite the finger that feeds them, mistaking it for a tasty worm.

Pet Frogs CONTINUED

GORGING on a grasshopper, tree frog pauses to digest. Frogs are kept in jars with an inch or so of water, sometimes given small branches to climb on.

LEAPING as much as 20 times its own length, frog extends its feet for safe landing. Sticky pads on toes help frog climb trees, cling to vertical surfaces.

CLIMBING twigs, frogs go after food. Because they are very nimble, Hermes is always crawling under furniture to catch those that escape from jars.

You know at a glance when he's "UNDER PRESSURE"

You only have to look at your man to know when he's "under pressure." His eyes give him away, his way of talking, and sometimes—though he'd never admit it—his disposition.

Your choice of a hot mealtime drink can help relieve that "pressure." Does the one you're serving lift him up . . . or key him up?

Invigorating tea helps relieve his mind—and yours—of any thought that you won't sleep. See if its clean, dry taste doesn't make everything you eat taste better. Try tea for seven days (at dinner, for example) and see if it doesn't help relieve the pressure of your day and make you feel better.

Timely note: tea costs less—far less—than any other beverage you can serve.

TO MAKE GOOD TEA THE STEPS ARE THREE

- 1 Have the water for your tea Boiling, boiling merrily!

- 2 Tea bag or teaspoon it matters not—One for each cup and one for the pot.

- 3 Don't skimp the time in which you brew it Three minutes or more, no less will do it!

P.S. For Iced tea use half again as much tea and plenty of ice.

IT'S FUN TO EAT OUT. And when the waiter asks, "What do you want to drink?" think to say, "Tea." More and more restaurants today pride themselves on the way they brew it.

A MOTHER CRIES ON HEARING GOSLIN HAS QUIT

MAN OUT OF A JOB

Pasadena tries too late to hold on to its school superintendent

In 1948, when Willard Goslin went to Pasadena, Calif. to become superintendent of its $15 million school system, he had a fine reputation and Pasadena was happy to get him. But almost immediately he ran into trouble. A strong administrator, he angered wealthy parents by telling them they could not send their children to public schools outside their own neighborhoods to avoid letting them mix with "undesirable" children, as was Pasadena's custom. He also failed to consult businessmen about the school budget, which his predecessor had been careful to do. When he asked for higher taxes to build new schools the businessmen called Goslin extravagant and defeated the tax bill.

Last month criticism of Goslin took a serious turn. A militant citizens' group accused him of permitting Communistic influences in the schools—because he continued already established classes in sex education and favored the elimination of report cards. Then, while Goslin was in New York City on business, the school board sent him a telegram asking him to resign.

Until then many citizens, though they admired Goslin, had never bothered to defend him. Now thousands of supporters, including influential businessmen, came quickly to his rescue. But they were too late. The board of education, by a vote of 4 to 1 (next page), refused to reconsider its demand, and Goslin quit. He had no hard feelings. "People are worried," he said philosophically, "and they are hunting for scapegoats." After getting a $23,250 settlement from the school board, Goslin headed for his boyhood home in Missouri to hunt for quail.

THESE SCHOOL BOARD MEMBERS OPPOSED GOSLIN

PAINT CONTRACTOR Milton Wopschall, board president, was anti-Goslin leader. Board accused Goslin of creating "dissension" in the schools.

LAWYER Vernon Brydolf does not dislike Goslin's educational theories but voted against him because "he didn't know how to handle the press."

MORTICIAN Lawrence Lamb has three children in Pasadena schools, voted to ask for the resignation of Goslin because he was "a storm center."

RETIRED TEACHER Harriet Sterling thinks Goslin is "a great educator" but voted with the others because he seldom asked board's advice.

THESE PEOPLE TRIED TO HELP GOSLIN KEEP JOB

HOUSEWIFE Gladys Rinehart, only member of school board to vote for Goslin, holds stack of mail she got from people agreeing with her stand.

MANUFACTURER Philip Fogg organized support for Goslin, plans to try ousting two members of board next year when they run for re-election.

In many respects, Cincinnati is unique. It is the world's leading maker of soap and playing cards. But in respect to LIFE's influence, it is like every American city. On over half of Cincinnati's citizens, LIFE has an influence more personal and stimulating than that of any other magazine.*

What happens when LIFE hits Cincinnati?

Cincinnati City Manager Wilbur R. Kellogg: "LIFE's pictorial insight into world, national and local affairs has always been colorful, interesting, and informative."

As a LIFE reader, you may recall seeing in these pages some interesting information about how many and what kind of people read LIFE.

The information, taken from a highly significant research study, shows that 62,600,000 people over age 10 read LIFE regularly or occasionally, and in 13 issues, LIFE reaches all these Americans:*

- 53% of all home owners
- 57% of all young adults (age 20 to 44)
- 62% of middle and upper economic groups
- 77% of people with some college education

While these figures indicate LIFE's tremendous national influence, they become more meaningful in terms of LIFE's local impact on an American city.

So, in pictures and words on these pages, you'll find the story of what LIFE means in the civil, cultural and community life of Cincinnati. You'll see how LIFE affects the way people in that city think and plan, buy and sell, live, and enjoy themselves.

In every city, town and hamlet across the nation, LIFE has the same sort of effect.

For with so many Americans reading LIFE, it has become part of the commerce and culture, the entertainment and enlightenment of the entire nation.

**From the new, important Accumulative Audience Study by Alfred Politz Research, Inc.*

This study measures the number of people who read a single issue of LIFE (23,950,000 Americans), reveals how this audience grows in thirteen issues to a total of 62,600,000 different people, and analyzes the characteristics of that audience.

The figures quoted on these pages refer to the number of people who read one or more out of thirteen issues of LIFE.

Vice-president William A. Blees of Crosley Division, AVCO Corp.: "With LIFE's selling power, we have increased unit sales of Crosley appliances, TV sets and radios by well over 60%." LIFE's audience includes 70% of American business owners and executives.*

Instructor John Singer, of Cincinnati's Reading High School, says: "I have clipped hundreds and hundreds of LIFE's vivid, informative and comprehensive articles for classroom projects." 7 out of 10 Americans who finished high school are LIFE readers.*

Business leader Neil H. McElroy, Pres. of Procter and Gamble Co.: "In its news reporting, LIFE plays an important part in stimulating community thinking."

Retailer J. B. Hall, Pres. of The Kroger Co., food store chain, recognizes LIFE's appeal to its 31,550,000 women readers.* His stores regularly feature foods advertised in LIFE. He says: "LIFE's advertising pages create demand that brings in increased sales."

In LIFE photo essay about an umbrella salesman were Guy Porter and Helen Dresselhaus, buyers for The Mabley and Carew Co. In their words: "We got hundreds and hundreds of calls from business associates. And our umbrellas went so fast we had to reorder twice."

City Councilman Charles P. Taft: "LIFE has an unusual combination of exciting news pictures and serious presentations of high educational value."

Men's wear is distributed by L. S. Meyer & Co. President Meyer (above left) knows LIFE's effect: "Our records show a marked increase in local demand for Hanes' products since they have been advertised in LIFE." 31,050,000 American men are LIFE readers.*

Women's wear in LIFE is the basis of many selling events for Shillito's department store in Cincinnati. Says Vice-president of store, Fred Lazarus III: "The response to LIFE-featured items proved again and again the tremendous impact of LIFE magazine."

University President Raymond Walters: "Many of LIFE's editorials impress me as penetrating and vital, forming a real contribution to American thought."

Industrialist Joseph S. Stern, Chairman of the Board of the United States Shoe Corporation: "LIFE is a tower of strength in building up good brands."

VENICE GETS WORK FROM 22 NATIONS FOR ITS BIGGEST BIENNALE

In 1895 the officials of Venice ousted a trained elephant named Tony from the town park, in order to make way for a grandiose new pavilion in which they inaugurated the first Biennale, the grand International Biennial Exposition of Contemporary Art. A timelier moment could scarcely have been chosen, for in that year the great pioneer painters of the modern era—Cézanne, Toulouse-Lautrec, Gauguin—were at the height of their powers, and Picasso and Matisse were just beginning their fabulous careers.

But none of their paintings hung on the walls of the exhibition of 1895.

This year the Biennale held its 25th show and took pains to neglect no aspect of contemporary art. Nearly 4,000 works were sent in by 22 nations, making the 1950 exhibition the biggest contemporary art show in history. On these nine pages LIFE presents some highlights from the exhibits, omitting American artists whose work is frequently seen on LIFE's pages.

To the 171,000 visitors who trudged through the Biennale's acres of art, the explosive Mexican show proved the big sensation. Neither the critics nor the public were much impressed by U.S. entries, dismissing them as "toothpaste abstractions." The real stars of the show were the men of an earlier generation, painters like Rivera and Siqueiros and Matisse and Picasso, whose own work and whose influence on the work of others highlighted the outstanding fact of the Biennale: that the old masters of modern art were still the masters of today.

Benjamin Palencia
SPAIN

Oblivious to the innovations and revolutionary antics of their famous compatriots, Picasso, Dali and Miró, the artists of the Spanish exhibition turned their pavilion into a stronghold of conservatism. The majority of the painters still appeared to be making their bows to the great Spanish masters of the past. Most heavily represented of Spain's living artists was Benjamin Palencia, who painted Twilight in Castile (above). Brought up among the flocks of sheep and the farms of southeastern Spain, Palencia likes to live in a tent during the summer, painting the stark hills and lowering skies of Castile in the turbulent style of El Greco, whom he reveres.

Raoul Hynckes
HOLLAND

The Dutch pavilion, devoted to artists of established reputation in Holland, was dominated by the "magic realists" whose technical skill and photographic eye are a match for the great Dutch masters of the 17th Century. Raoul Hynckes exhibited a series of still lifes, like the Basket of Fruit (left), so realistic that most spectators were tempted to touch the canvas. Hynckes lives with his wife near Amsterdam, works in a black-walled studio so he can focus on his models undistracted by other colors. An entrenched opponent of the "chaotic art" of Picasso, he spends his free time writing articles and picking mushrooms which he first paints, then eats.

Paul Delvaux
BELGIUM

To a show full of eye-stoppers, Surrealist Paul Delvaux added this provocative concoction called The Siren (above) which he painted last winter on the North Sea coast of Belgium. Delvaux, who began his art career at the age of 7 turning out prodigious drawings of battle scenes, later turned to more tranquil but equally startling pictures of icy nudes roaming through crowds of peasants or plucking roses from under ghostly streetcars. The Siren, which the artist describes as "slightly outlandish," is one of several paintings of displaced mermaids that Delvaux developed from imagination or from dreams which he has occasionally borrowed from his wife.

Maria Vieira da Silva

PORTUGAL

The squares of Portuguese tiles and the cubes of French art have had a strong influence on Maria Vieira da Silva, the outstanding artist in Portugal's show. Born in Lisbon 42 years ago, she studied modern art in Paris, later returned to Lisbon where she discovered anew the colorful glazed ornaments and enamels in the cathedrals and old mosques. In paintings like Azulejos (above) she has tried to capture the brilliance and shifting patterns of the tiles which to her convey "the musical mathematics of a fugue."

Mohammed Yehia Chalabi

EGYPT

Like most contemporary Egyptian artists, who have developed busy colonies in Cairo and Alexandria, Mohammed Chalabi paints the popular scenes of his native land in a style almost unaffected by the art innovations of the past 50 years. Adhering to the realistic traditions of 19th Century European painting, Chalabi has depicted in The Visit (right) the ancient Egyptian custom of calling on friends, laden with gifts of food and native delicacies. Chalabi, 38, is a government supervisor of school art classes.

Ghika

GREECE

Like the blare of a trumpet in a mausoleum, the loud, angular paintings of Ghika shattered the antique atmosphere of the Greek pavilion. Trained in Paris art schools, Ghika, whose real name is Nicholas Hadjikyriakos, now lives beneath the Acropolis in Athens. There in 1948 he painted the Great Landscape of Hydra (left), the rocky island off the Peloponnesus where he used to live. Trying to combine the "architectural, geological and spiritual atmosphere" of Hydra, which is mostly known for its prickly pears and sailors, Ghika created a patchwork of cubes and angles, at once warmed by the bright Aegean sun and cooled by the light of the moon.

Boža Ilić

YUGOSLAVIA

The artists of Yugoslavia, exhibiting at the Biennale for the first time since the war, demonstrated that they were well aware of their obligations to the new Communist state. The older established painters showed strongly realistic views of their native landscape, while the younger generation of artists offered heroic scenes of partisan warfare and laborious portrayals of the activities of the worker. Youngest exhibitor was Boža Ilić, 31, the son of a Serbian peasant and formerly a painter of church icons, whose paintings of civil reconstruction, like Sounding the Terrain of New Belgrade (right), last year won him one of the top state awards.

Leo Lubin

ISRAEL

The painters of the new state of Israel, which this year sent its first exhibit to Venice, were all natives of other countries who had migrated to Palestine and brought with them many different art styles. One of the earliest artist-emigrants was Leo Lubin who, some 50 years ago, was born in Bavaria of Russian parentage, grew up in Chicago, studied painting in Paris and settled in Palestine in 1923. Since then he has lived and worked among the Arabs. In the Arab city of Jaffa three years ago he sketched the squatting smokers (left) as they puffed at their water-cooled narghile pipes in an old Byzantine church that had been transformed into a cafe.

David Alfaro Siqueiros

MEXICO

Sensation of the highly popular Mexican show was David Alfaro Siqueiros. A truculent Communist, who was once ousted from the party because of a romantic tryst with a girl friend, Siqueiros exhibited 14 bombastic paintings crammed with political and social symbolism. The Devil in Church (above), like most of his paintings in the show, thundered its propaganda in garish colors of Vinylite, which the artist applied with a spray gun. It represents the "bad influence of the church in Mexico," with the rich in the balcony looking down on the humble masses below, who are worshipping the force that is about to destroy them. In more temperate mood today than he was when he painted it three years ago, Siqueiros now calls it "just a study of perspective."

Salvatore Fiume

ITALY

Among the 900 paintings in the sprawling Italian exhibition, every school and style had its champion. The shadow of Picasso fell forcefully across the pavilion, even though the political tenets of Communism had turned some top abstractionists into billboard artists. Somewhere in the middle were men like Salvatore Fiume, whose powerful triptych, Isle of Statues (of which a detail is reproduced above), hung forebodingly over the rest. In it Fiume depicted a world of inscrutable colossi who stand as awesome monuments to a past civilization. In such paintings, Sicilian-born Fiume reveals influence of the early surrealist work of the famous Italian, De Chirico. To make a living, however, he adopts a conventional style in which he dashes off murals for bars and homes.

Massimo Campigli
ITALY

One of the best known and best selling of contemporary Italian artists is 55-year-old Massimo Campigli, who likes to paint big-eyed, lollipop women like the Weavers (right), sitting stiffly behind their looms as do the women of Florence, who weave strands of straw for hats. Although Campigli, with his sculptress wife, lives most of the year in Paris, he vacations in Italy, and all of his paintings reflect his love of the simple forms and subdued colors of the ancient Etruscan and Pompeian wall paintings of his native land.

BRAZIL

Making its debut at the Biennale this year, Brazil gave the biggest showing to 47-year-old Candido Portinari, who rose from peasant boy on a coffee plantation to become Brazil's most celebrated modern artist. Portinari, a diminutive man, likes to paint huge pictures dramatizing the suffering that engulfs the lives of the humble people of his country. Victims of the Drought (left) was painted from recollections of starving peasants who dragged themselves haltingly through Portinari's village in the summer of 1916.

Diego Rivera
MEXICO

Oldtime Communist and a onetime leader of Mexico's revolutionary muralists, Diego Rivera exhibited 16 big canvases that were as loud and obvious as travel posters. Still socially conscious in his vehement way, Rivera has also become society conscious, paints portraits of Mexican and U.S. bigwigs by the dozens. Most appealing of Rivera's latest paintings was the over-life-size portrait of Enriqueta Dávila, well-to-do belle and daughter of a politician of Mexico City whom he portrayed in simple peasant-style clothes.

Witchcraft unites Rex and Lilli in a hit comedy

"Oh, Pye, Pye, Pyewacket—what's the matter with me?" said a lady named Gillian, talking to her magical cat (right). "Why do I feel this way? It's all such a rut. And you can't get away from it. . . . Why don't you give me something for Christmas? What would I like? I'd like to meet someone different. . . . Like the man upstairs."

With this bizarre conversation, John van Druten's new Broadway hit comedy, Bell, Book and Candle, gets off to a merry start. Gillian is a genuine up-to-date witch who lives in an attractive New York apartment and rides in taxicabs instead of on broomsticks. The man upstairs is a handsome young publisher named Shep. Gillian lures Shep into her arms and makes him fall in love with her, but eventually finds that she herself cannot experience love unless she gives up her unholy powers and becomes totally de-witched.

As far as acting goes, the play could hardly be better. Lilli Palmer makes a supremely chic witch who looks as if she divided her time between the devil and Dior. Her upstairs lover is Rex Harrison, Miss Palmer's real-life husband. In Bell, Book and Candle they are making their first joint appearance (see cover) on Broadway and prove the most lustrous new acting team New York has seen in two decades. They sustain their excellence better than the play which, after setting a high standard for unconventional fooling at the start, develops into routine romance and makes the audience feel it is drinking weak tea after a sparkling witch's brew.

UNION MADE

PLACENTA, where nourishment and oxygen pass from mother's bloodstream to unborn child, is here stripped to main vessels. Arteries are red, veins blue.

PATTERN OF BLOODSTREAM

Casts reveal intricate network

Ever since Dr. William Harvey first figured out 322 years ago that blood flows continuously through the human body in an intricate system of tiny tubes, scientists have been mapping the complicated circulatory network. Now, with an improved technique for preserving the circulatory system intact, Rudolph Skarda of the University of California Medical School can show arteries and veins with greater scope than ever before possible. The placenta above is the most detailed display of that organ's complex blood system, and the lower body at right is the largest specimen of its kind ever made.

To prepare his specimens, Skarda uses a process called corrosion. Very quickly after an organ is removed, following either an operation or death, he flushes out the arteries and veins and injects a dyed, acid-resistant solution which hardens in a matter of hours. Then he places the organ in an acid which dissolves the flesh, leaving only a colored cast of the circulatory system. The job at right, says Skarda, was his most difficult. When he got word that the patient, still alive, was in a coma, Skarda moved to the hospital and waited for two days. Twenty-five minutes after the man's death he was hard at work. This remarkable specimen and Skarda's unique collection of 68 placentas, recovered from mothers at childbirth, are the most colorful examples of a teaching tool that has far out-classed textbook diagrams and photographs in the over-all study of human blood circulation.

TOP U.S. JOCKEYS CLASH AT BOWIE

Culmone pulls ahead of Shoemaker

For the past six weeks a pair of 19-year-old jockeys have been stirring up more dust on U.S. race tracks than the horses have. Hardly a day has passed without Sicilian-born Joe Culmone and Texas-born Bill Shoemaker each booting in two or three winners. Both had breezed by the 334-winner mark for the year, something no other jockey had done for 44 years. Culmone was riding in the east and Shoemaker on the West Coast. The big question was: which would ride more winners in 1950?

The lead seesawed dramatically, and then last week Bill Shoemaker accepted an invitation to fly east and ride for one day against Culmone at Bowie, Md. The two pint-sized rivals came face to face at a press party in a Washington hotel and bristled like two strange dogs on a street corner. Shoemaker, a shy little (4' 9½") fellow who is less of a chatterbox than Calvin Coolidge, said nothing. All the talking whenever the two could be gotten within spitting distance (below) was done by the cocky Culmone. At Bowie next day Shoemaker won the first race, but Culmone bounced back to win four of the next six. Before the eighth, a two-horse race put on especially for them, someone shouted across the jockey's room to Culmone. "He's going to get you this time." "If he does," retorted Culmone, "he'll surprise both you and me." Culmone won that race and the ninth one, too, for a big afternoon of six winners. It boosted his total for the year to 350 against Shoemaker's 342.

THE RIVALS MEET before Bowie duel. Shoemaker (left) listens politely as Culmone does the talking.

COCKY TILT of Culmone's skullcap expresses his attitude. Skullcap is worn underneath silk riding cap. →

SHAKING UP MOUNTS AROUND FIRST TURN, CULMONE (RIGHT) AND SHOEMAKER (CENTER) BEGIN TO GAIN ON LEADER. CULMONE WON BY A HALF-LENGTH

"LUGGING IN" toward rail, Culmone on No. 5 makes jockey on No. 8 squeal for room. Culmone has been suspended for rough riding four times this year.

"GOING TO THE STICK," Culmone tries to drive mount through opening on the rail. To win races, he is willing to take more chances than most jockeys.

MEAT TEAM AT WORK

New Models
IN PIGS

If nature designed the pig to provide just the pork cuts women most frequently write on their shopping lists, it might come to the packer looking something like this—hams at both ends . . . mostly loin roasts, center-cut chops and ready-sliced bacon in between.

Such an all-meat porker is a little too much to hope for. But the men whose business it is to think of pigs in terms of tender hams, meaty roasts and well-streaked bacon have brought about some remarkable changes in the speed and efficiency of producing pork and making it available to the meat-eating public.

Getting a porker ready for market once took about a year. Now pigs often weigh 200 to 250 pounds at the tender age of six months. Two pig crops a year help to keep the pork chops plentiful in your market the year round.

And with their customers' meat preferences in mind, members of your Meat Team are mapping out some physical changes in "porcus Americanus," too.

The pig of tomorrow may not be solid meat, but a little lengthening here and letting out there, through selective breeding, may well mean a bigger share of his poundage in the most-wanted pork cuts.

American Meat Institute

THE MEAT TEAM

"I grow it"

"I process it"

"I sell it"

A BIG HAM FOR THE LIONS CLUB DINNER—a smaller one for Mrs. Jones' family of four. Steve Pavish, meat retailer of La Grange, Illinois, tries to fill the exact needs of all his customers. Since there are more small families, fastest-growing demand is for smaller cuts.

Dr. H. A. Stewart of North Carolina State College has combined the best performance ratings of five different breeds in these healthy offspring. Results—more pigs per litter, faster weight gains, better lean-meat yield.

HERE'S WHAT WE'RE SHOOTING FOR. Roy Ormond, livestock and meat specialist for a Wisconsin packing plant, shows group of interested farmers the result of good feeding and breeding. The sides of pork came from two pigs of equal weight. One at left is longer, leaner, will require less trimming to convert it into salable cuts.

JOCKEY ROOM CAPERS by Culmone help to relieve boredom. At cards he is high-strung, aggressive and, though usually careful with money, plays boldly in the jockey room's knock-rummy games. After he swung a broom at Jockey Cardoza (below), Cardoza said to him, "You'll be borrowing from me someday."

Jockeys CONTINUED

WATCHING A SPILL while sitting out one race on roof outside jockey's room, Culmone (left) remarks, "If I were in there, they'd blame it on me."

CULMONE HAS PLENTY OF GUTS AND GALL

By his own admission Joe Culmone's seat on a horse is outrageous—stirrups too short, chin buried in the horse's mane, fanny tilted skyward like an anti-aircraft gun. But he possesses more brass than a burglar and more brazen confidence in himself than any little man since Napoleon. These traits do not endear him to his fellow jockeys but seem to make horses he rides run stronger and faster.

When Joe Culmone stepped off the boat from Sicily four years ago, he could not speak a word of English and was fired from his first race-track job as stableboy because he and his boss could not understand what the other was saying. He learned something about riding, won his first race last year but soon afterward was suspended for incompetence and endangering other horses with his wild riding. A top jockey's agent who was asked to handle his riding engagements took a critical look at Culmone's large feet and cracked, "He's got feet like a barber. He'll be cutting my hair in another two years."

But the rest of Culmone's body did not grow like his feet. He rode at 107 pounds last year and still rides at 107 without dieting or resorting to steam boxes. He began the year by leading all jockeys at Florida's Hialeah Park until he was set down for rough riding. He was top rider at Gulfstream Park despite a 10-day suspension for rough riding. Between suspensions he rode like a crazy man in Delaware, New Jersey, Maryland. When one judge fined him $200 he tried to get even by borrowing money from the judge and not repaying it. But his boss made him pay it back.

Culmone is under contract to Mrs. Dodge Sloan's Brookmeade Stable, which pays him a regular salary. If there is no Brookmeade horse entered in a race, he can ride for another stable getting a minimum of $20 on a losing mount, $50 plus bonus for a winner. Like Shoemaker, he will earn about $75,000 this year. Although Shoemaker trails Culmone, old race-trackers think Shoemaker will be around for a long time. They are not so sure about Culmone.

Here are 10 Robert Montgomerys. Don't be misled by that easy-going look—it disguises one of the most versatile dynamos of our time. Stump speaking for his chosen candidates . . . and an allergy for syndicated gambling, blackmailers, and insolence . . . have kept the Montgomery blood circulating nicely. Stubborn, he has a formidable reputation for getting his man. He particularly despises pretentiousness. And his wit can be devastating.

IN HIS 46 YEARS Robert Montgomery has lived almost 18 lives! Until such roles as that of the psychopathic killer in "Night Must Fall," most people thought of Robert Montgomery as a breezy, elegant young man about town.

Then he turned out some vigorously creative movie work: MGM's tough, realistic "They Were Expendable" and "Lady in the Lake," in which he had the audience view the action through the eyes of the unseen hero.

Every year months are added to our Since your father's day 16 years have

*In 1948—we gained about 5 months more
In 1949—6 months more again
In 1950—who knows?*

"To me, old age is always 15 years older than I am," maintains a senior statesman.

This is one of those jokes that is really serious.

But just how long is a man considered young?

If, like Robert Montgomery, you were born in 1905, the oldsters at that time were saying "Oh, maybe till he's about 25!" But twenty years ago, you were called "Young man!" until you were thirty.

In the '30s came the romance of the century . . . and the famous pair were around forty, you'll remember.

You don't have to earn this extra youth, either. You get it anyhow . . . just by having picked your century so intelligently.

Perhaps you agree with the late Bob Benchley, who said that whenever he felt like exercise, he lay down until the feeling passed. Or perhaps you do push-ups ten minutes every morning.

In either case, you're still in much better shape than your grandfather. Fifty years ago a man's bank account was judged by the size of his bay window. Exercise was for day laborers and schoolboys. A very dim view was taken of daily bathing.

Today it's not just the miracle drugs that prolong your life. It's the whole way you live. Posture, proteins, sun, air and that efficient health promotor, running hot water . . . all these have a surprising amount to do with how long you live and how healthy you look.

It's a kind of benevolent circle; out of feeling young and healthy, you take a young man's care of yourself. And each continues to promote the other.

"Whatever a man's age, he can reduce it

NOW, THERE IS MONTGOMERY the producer, director, short story writer, ABC commentator. (Incidentally, he is one of the best wing shots in the country.)

World War II saw him in a Navy uniform doing liaison work, then commanding P. T. boats. On "D" Day he commanded one of the first destroyer squadrons off the coast of Normandy.

Born near Beacon, New York, Robert Montgomery's youth was pleasantly furnished with dogs, horses, and travel. His collection of first editions began then. (His ## life span! been added:

several years by putting a bright-colored flower in his buttonhole," said Mark Twain.

Here's another habit that helps reduce your age by several years . . . takes less than a minute.

It's this: Before you shave, give your face a good douse of the tap's hottest water. Your barber does it after your shave.

But dermatologists say it does you twice the good to apply it before you shave. One, it brings up your own nourishing, renewing blood. Two, it softens hair for an extra-quick, clean shave.

"Circumstances alter faces," said Wells.

The everyday circumstance of Williams Aqua Velva after your shave will do the most to give you a look of healthy skin freshness.

Regularly used, this circulation-rouser brightens and braces your skin in a way nothing else can. A very good reason why

Williams Aqua Velva has become the world's most popular after-shave lotion.

Williams Aqua Velva is full of good sensations. Tonic freshness. A masculine scent. It keeps your skin flexible and comfortable . . . its natural moisture intact. And that helps protect it from sun, wind, cold. Another way Aqua Velva looks after your face: It lends first aid to scrapes or skin breaks, keeps your skin feeling soothed, looking young!

FULL OF FRIENDLY PURPOSE . . . SUPERIOR IN VERY DEFINITE WAYS

. . . these preparations were worked out for all 3 ways of shaving

Special preparation for brush users. Williams Shaving Cream offers your skin a new comfort—extract of lanolin—an emollient remarkably like that contained in all human skin. This extract is 25 times as active as in plain lanolin, the well-known skin conditioner. We're proud to say that it's found only in Williams.

Particularly, if you take a young man's care of your appearance—you'll really appreciate how this bland cream helps to keep your skin looking young and healthy.

For the brushless shaver. Williams Glider contains the same type of oil that is used on a baby's skin. This special ingredient softens your beard and enables the razor to cut your whiskers close and clean without scraping. Another ingredient, found only in Williams, helps replace the skin's natural oil . . . soothes tender skin. Rubbed well into the skin, it helps to keep skin smooth, young-looking.

If you use a Schick, Remington, etc . . . a unique beard conditioner. Williams Lightning Llectric Shave is a pleasantly fragrant liquid that softens your beard so that it almost wipes off. One ingredient prevents sticky perspiration from slowing up your razor.

Another ingredient lubricates not only your skin, but the razor-head—giving you a faster, closer shave. After using Williams Lightning Llectric Shave, your skin feels happy; has a fit, healthy look you'll like.

After any or all shaving—use the world's most popular after-shave lotion. Never miss Aqua Velva after you shave. Yes, any time you want a quick refresher . . . use Williams Aqua Velva.

In the year 1840 The J. B. Williams Company put its first shaving preparations on the market. Since then our products have held the public approval. Their good name has grown and grown, for an obvious reason: Men know these Williams products do the work, and do it better. Year after year, more and more men are using Williams products. Year after year, more and more men are looking wonderfully young, alive and healthy.

A unique Jewish trial probes

by LOUDON S. WAINWRIGHT

A MURDER trial strange to the 20th Century and unique in American history came to an end last week in New York. The charge of murder came from a Brooklyn fish dealer, who swore that five years ago his brother had been killed in a Nazi concentration camp—by a Jewish religious leader. The trial was held not before a judge and jury but before a tribunal consisting of two Jewish rabbis and an attorney. It heard evidence, not in order to pronounce a legal verdict and punishment—for it had no such authority—but solely to declare a man guilty or not guilty by the moral law of the ages. The scene was not a courtroom but the paneled, high-ceilinged library of the six-story, stone-front Stephen Wise Congress House on East 84th Street.

This tribunal was a beth din, an institution ancient and revered in Hebrew history. Centuries before Christ, when religion and law were one in Palestine, the beth din had pronounced judgments both civil and doctrinal. Through the Christian centuries, through the Middle Ages and down to modern times, changing custom and circumstances had forced the beth din to retreat into a strictly religious realm, though it always sought to act as the venerable custodian and voice of Hebrew moral law. Now, in a building that is the headquarters of the American Jewish Congress, a beth din was summoned to perform its ancient role. It was called into being by the fish dealer's electrifying memory of a moment of death in a concentration camp—a flashback that, for the days of this trial, illumined once again the great nightmare in which millions of Europe's Jews had died. This is how it came to pass.

A terrible recognition

BENJAMIN KRIEGER, a short, stocky man whose wide mouth glitters with gold teeth, came to America in 1949 with his second wife (his first wife and their children died in an Auschwitz crematorium). He settled in a clean, four-room apartment in Brooklyn and went to work—as in the old country—in a fish market.

It was on the morning of June 20 that Krieger learned he was not so far from the world he had fled. Walking along the sidewalk near his store, he saw a man passing, a man wearing a natty panama hat, a man whose face Krieger thought he remembered. He ran forward and accosted the passer-by. In rapid Yiddish he snapped out the question, "Were you at Auschwitz?"

The stranger nodded. At the urgency in Krieger's voice a crowd quickly gathered on the sidewalk.

"At Dachau? Mühlendorf?"

Pale and frightened, the man nodded to Krieger's questions.

"Were you a blockschreiber at Mühlendorf?" Krieger shouted.

ACCUSER AND ACCUSED provide trial's most dramatic moment when Benjamin Krieger names

Majer Mittelman as the man who killed Krieger's brother, then turns and points to Mittelman (right).

THE MAN WHO KILLED MY BROTHER"

back into horrors of concentration camps to judge the charge that a man was murdered over a plate of soup

THE TRIBUNAL listens to bearded Ezekiel Ruttner, one of four rabbis who testified for the accused, Majer Mittelman. From the left, the tribunal members are: Rabbi Simon Federbush, formerly the chief rabbi of Finland; Chairman

Leo Pfeffer, the lawyer member; and Rabbi Joseph Lookstein, who is a professor at Yeshiva University, New York City. At the extreme right is the translator. These and the other drawings of the trial were done for LIFE by William Sharp.

Without waiting for an answer to his last question, Krieger screamed, "Then you are the man who killed my brother!" He jerked back his arm and struck the stranger.

The man twisted out of Krieger's grasp and ran down the sidewalk, his bulky briefcase still clutched tightly in one hand, his umbrella in the other. Shouting, Krieger and the crowd followed.

The police broke up the near riot. At the stationhouse Krieger repeated his accusations. It had happened at Mühldorf, a concentration camp about 40 miles northeast of Munich. This camp was not a highly geared incinerator like Auschwitz and Dachau, but it had the usual qualifications for destroying human beings: torturing labor, filth, sporadic SS sadism—and hunger. Food, in this world, was supreme—even dirty, watery food. Late one day, on a forgotten date in early 1945, Benjamin Krieger stood in the food line a little behind his brother Zalman, who was feverishly hungry. When Zalman pushed his plate forward for food, the man checking the line answered by seizing the metal eating plate and crashing it on Zalman's head. Zalman died. Now Benjamin Krieger said that the man checking the line that night was the man in the panama hat.

The Brooklyn police, baffled by the babbling Yiddish, could take no action: any crime, if it truly had happened, had been committed outside the U.S. The stranger admitted having been at Mühldorf but denied ever having seen the Krieger brothers. He refused to bring assault charges against his accuser. He was Majer (pronounced "Meyer") Mittelman, 34 years of age; he had come to the U.S. in 1947; he lived with his wife and two young daughters at Olyphant, Pa., where he conducted synagogue services and also worked in a local packing house as a shohet (slaughterer of poultry and cattle in the kosher fashion). He had lost 45 relatives in German death camps. His memories were no less terrifying than Benjamin Krieger's.

As the crowd dispersed and Mittelman hurried away, it looked as if the matter would remain an ugly, unsolved mystery. Back home that night Mittelman, a badly frightened man, consulted a lawyer and was advised not to jeopardize his position by even letting the incident be known. In Brooklyn, meantime, Krieger's fierce anger seemed spent, and he answered inquirers tersely, "I am a businessman. I have no time." But the story broke in the New York papers next day—and it was not long before Mittelman's congregation knew that he had been accused of murder. He proclaimed his innocence and his readiness to defend himself. At this point the American Jewish Congress came into the picture: dedicated for over 30 years to the welfare of the Jewish community, it could not let this grim incident be passed over casually. Under the urging of prominent Jewish groups throughout the country, it offered a beth din to judge the fish dealer's harsh cry. Both men agreed.

"So he said you already took soup"

THE hearings opened the morning of Oct. 10. In the library of the building on 84th Street there was only the minimum furniture, with high-backed chairs and a long table for the tribunal before the big stone fireplace flanked by the U.S. flag and a Jewish emblem. A crowd of perhaps 40 persons came to the first session, among them many bearded rabbis wearing the high-crowned black beaver hats and long black coats Orthodox European Jews have worn for the past three hundred years. There were also many young men dressed in ordinary business suits; they sat in the back of the room, whispering to each other in Yiddish. At least half the people in the room were former concentration camp inmates.

Mittelman, wearing a black yarmulke (skullcap) on the back of his head and a natty, gray double-breasted suit, sat alone at the defense table near the front. Whenever newcomers arrived he turned anxiously toward the door, and when he recognized friends he bowed his head and smiled and waved. His knife-featured face was white but composed. His wife and a little group of relatives sat near him in the second row. When Krieger arrived, wearing a brown suit with a blue shirt open at the neck, he looked across the room, and for a moment Mittelman stared back. Then both men, with no change of expression, turned away.

Leo Pfeffer, the gangling, bespectacled chairman of the tribunal and assistant general counsel of the American Jewish Congress, opened the hearings. "These charges in their present form, neither satisfactorily corroborated nor satisfactorily dispelled, can only work a disservice to the Jewish community, impairing its dignity, self-respect and prestige."

Benjamin Krieger, his rough-featured face gray under his cap, came to the stand for direct examination by his counsel, Harry Berger. He began his testimony in a hoarse, even voice. Speaking Yiddish throughout, he more often seemed to address the translator sitting beside him than his lawyer or the tribunal. Translated phrase by phrase, his language, cramped with emotion, often seemed almost biblical.

First he identified Mittelman as a blockschreiber in the concentration camp, a clerk of the block (group of barracks) in which he lived. It was his responsibility to keep work, food and roll-call attendance records of the men in his block. Over the blockschreiber was another prisoner, the block elder; and over the elder were the SS guards. When the prisoners lined up every night after work in the yard near the barracks for their piece of bread and plate of watery soup, the blockschreiber checked off the numbers of the inmates as they came through the line.

TRIAL CONTINUED

The witness came to the day of the crime and his brother's last meal. "It came the turn on the line of my brother, so he said to him you already took soup. So he said I did not take yet and he remained standing. So he takes the plate and gives him a crash over the head. It is a sort of bowl, and he fell down and the blood began pouring. So I came over to him and asked him why did you hit him? And he gave me a punch in the heart. So I picked up my brother and I wiped him off. And I brought him into the barracks, and I went to get the meal. I went to take myself the meal my brother didn't take already."

During this description Mittelman, at the defense table only a few feet from his accuser, sat with his eyes closed and his head propped in one hand. Every time Krieger referred to Mittelman, he turned and faced the man he was accusing.

When had the attack occurred? Krieger could only answer, "To me one day was like another." Then, upon repeated questioning, he said he thought it had taken place about four or five weeks before the prisoners were freed by the Americans (around May 1, 1945). He could, understandably, be no more specific.

The lawyer went back to characterizing the accused: BERGER. Through what means was a person able to get a job as a blockschreiber?

KRIEGER. I saw with my own eyes that he had ability to knock this one, to drive that one, to give this one less food, to give that one more food.

CHAIRMAN. Previous to this incident . . . did he treat you differently than he treated the other inmates?

KRIEGER. Yes . . . he gave us watery soup, from the top.

One of Mittelman's two attorneys, Simeon Gross, tall and balding and sad-faced, came forward from the defense table for the cross-examination.

GROSS. What impressed Mr. Mittelman's face on your memory?

KRIEGER. I recognized him by his crooked nose.

GROSS. In Mühldorf, was Mittelman an overseer for each day for giving out food?

KRIEGER. Yes, he was blockschreiber. I saw him at mealtimes. . . . He looked at your face and directed whether you should be served from the bottom or the top.

Throughout the three hours he was on the stand that first morning (and even more markedly later) Benjamin Krieger's bearing was one of extreme impatience. He seemed to find it hard to understand that people could not take his story for the simple truth—why should they apparently want to find him in error? When a recess was called for lunch he got up, pulled angrily at his cap and stalked muttering from the room.

Rather suddenly, when trial resumed, the defense showed its hand. The complainant's case was interrupted for a defense witness, one Jacob Grossinger, 46, of Brooklyn. Grossinger said that he had been at Mühldorf with Mittelman and made the claim on which the defense was largely to rest: Mittelman had been severely ill and confined to his barracks a great part of the time he was at Mühldorf.

When Krieger came back on the stand, the defense went back to the point of dates. His story was unchanged, but he was beginning to tire. He contradicted himself on small points. At first he said he and his brother were in different blocks at Mühldorf. Then he said that at the time of the incident they were in the same. Such confusion damaged his case. But the emotion and finality in his voice when he spoke of his brother seemed unquestionably real: "They took my brother to the hospital, and they took down his record. He was there a few days and he died."

Then the defense came back with the last witness of the day: Rabbi Moses Hoffman, a gaunt, bearded Hungarian Jew, who said that he had come to Mühldorf around July 1944 and that he had lived in the same barracks with Mittelman; in fact, that he had slept in the next bed. According to Hoffman, the accused had been confined to his bed with a urinary disorder the last two months before the liberation. Then, under questioning by Krieger's own counsel about the fatal incident, Hoffman said flatly, "I didn't see it and I didn't hear of it." It was impossible, he added, that he would not hear of it.

With cross-examination, however, Berger was able to establish real credibility for Krieger's statement that Mittelman had been—nominally at least—a blockschreiber.

BERGER. And do you mean to tell me that Mr. Mittelman was in his barracks in broad daylight and a German guard would walk by and close his eyes?

HOFFMAN. He was a friend of the block leaders. And when the guard came through, he got up and sat at the table and made as if he were working.

BERGER. What kind of work did he do?

HOFFMAN. He had to do clerical work.

A beating for a loaf of bread

A LARGER crowd, at least 75 people, came to the second hearing on Oct. 22. Before it opened, Mittelman and Krieger passed in the hall, and again they looked quickly away from each other. The strain of the affair was evident in the faces of both men. Krieger's in particular had the damp whiteness of a man who is about to be sick at his stomach. Little groups of people stood around in the hall outside the room, and their sibilant Yiddish arguments echoed down the broad, uncarpeted stairway.

Benjamin Krieger was called back to the stand for further cross-examination. This time he did not stay long. Gross again tried to shake him on the dates when he was in each of several concentration camps. As Gross's questions got more insistent, Krieger grew more and more impatient. Quite suddenly Krieger stood up and shouted, "Why do they ask me all these questions?" He pointed at Mittelman. "I knew him as a scoundrel and he is still a scoundrel!" At this several people in the audience stood up and shouted too.

When order was restored Gross returned to the alleged crime. GROSS. Did Mittelman take the bowl? Did he throw the bowl?

KRIEGER. He took my brother's plate and hit him over the head, and blood began pouring. That is what I said last time.

CHAIRMAN. To which barracks did you take your brother?

KRIEGER. To our barracks, where we slept.

CHAIRMAN. Did you and your brother live in the same barracks?

KRIEGER. Yes.

GROSS. Didn't you testify...

Berger quickly interrupted with an objection. Krieger jumped up again and started out of the room, waving his hands wildly. Members of the audience began shouting again. When Chairman Pfeffer again restored order, he said, "We understand that we are all human beings, and sometimes we feel so deeply that we forget ourselves. . . . Any member of the audience who cannot restrain himself, he will be asked to leave." Krieger, for the time being, was excused from the stand.

Jacob Rubenstein was then called as a witness for the complainant. An emaciated, hollow-cheeked man of 41, Rubenstein—like both Krieger and Mittelman—had lost his first wife and children in the concentration camps. Speaking slowly and clearly in Yiddish, he was a most convincing witness.

BERGER. Was Mr. Mittelman a blockschreiber?

RUBENSTEIN. When I was [at Mühldorf] he was the blockschreiber.

BERGER. Did you know the deceased Zalman Krieger?

RUBENSTEIN. Yes. He slept near me in the same barracks.

BERGER. Were you on the line with Mr. Krieger for supper at the time the alleged incident happened?

RUBENSTEIN. Yes.

BERGER. Will you explain to this tribunal what happened?

RUBENSTEIN. One thing I know: that he smote him during the distribution of the food because I stood behind him, and he fell.

BERGER. You said "he." Who is "he"?

ACCUSER'S CHIEF WITNESS was Jacob Rubenstein, who said he saw Mittelman strike Krieger's brother and that accused had also beaten him.

TRIAL CONTINUED

RUBENSTEIN. He (pointing to Mittelman). He hit him, and I also have signs from beatings he gave me.

His voice, when he made the accusation, was deliberate and strong, and as he mentioned the beating Mittelman supposedly gave him, he brought his left hand against his ribs. Mittelman, his hand patting the yarmulke smooth on the back of his head, stared at him for a long moment, then shrugged and turned away.

Now Lawyer Berger, seizing his advantage, pressed for more details.

BERGER. After Zalman Krieger was on the ground, did you see any blood?

RUBENSTEIN. I didn't notice.

BERGER. Why didn't you look?

RUBENSTEIN. Because I was hungry, and I ran as soon as possible to get my own food.

(Here it was again—the steady drumbeat reference to food that sounded through the whole trial. It kept reminding everyone in this oak-paneled room on 84th Street of the torturing days when the momentary weight of soup or bread on the stomach was the most important reality to men.)

Now Rubenstein went on to tell the tribunal of the time Mittelman had allegedly beaten him. He had stolen a dirty loaf of bread from Mittelman's barracks: "I lay down in my barracks and ate the bread. Later Mr. Mittelman came, and I didn't want to tell him. He found crumbs. He hit me so long that I couldn't move. Then he brought an SS man, and the SS man hit me."

Now Berger turned in his questions to meet Mittelman's defense head-on.

BERGER. At any time you were in the same block with Mittelman, did you see him sick?

RUBENSTEIN. No.

On cross-examination Mittelman's counsel couldn't shake Rubenstein's testimony. On dates his memory was as hazy as Krieger's had been. But he recalled the fatal incident clearly and described it. That dateless night, although it was already dark by the time they went to supper, he had been able to see all that happened by a light strung on a pole near the soup pot. He was standing only 10 or 15 places behind Zalman Krieger on the line.

One of the judges now asked how the witness could be sure of his identification of Mittelman now. He answered:

"I will tell you. If you see what a man has done to someone else, you may not recognize him later. But if you went through his hands yourself and his hands are still on your bones, then you have memories to this date. I definitely recognize him."

Here was solid and impressive testimony. It was hard to believe this man had not seen what he said he saw. The one question that could be asked was: did the witness not have his own reasons for hating Mittelman—or the blockschreiber he thought was Mittelman?

It was the defense's turn next, with their most compelling witness. Dr. Alexander Schonfeld of East St. Louis, Ill., a tall, fleshy man in a dark blue suit, testified in English. Schonfeld said he and Mittelman had been in the same group of prisoners at Mühldorf, and that there Schonfeld had been assigned by the SS as head of the camp hospital.

ACCUSED'S CHIEF WITNESS was Dr. Alexander Schonfeld, a former camp physician, who swore Mittelman had been ill at time of alleged attack.

TRIAL CONTINUED

GROSS. Did you minister to Mittelman in February or March 1945?
DR. SCHONFELD. It was in February, the second half.

GROSS. What did you find was the matter with him?

DR. SCHONFELD. Periproctal abscess—infection of the entire lower body. He had a septic condition; pus went through his body. . . .

GROSS. Did you operate?

DR. SCHONFELD. It busted itself. He couldn't pass water, have bowel movements. One day—it seems Pesach (Passover—about the end of March)—one day he said he feels a little bit lighter. It really busted. Later he started a little bit walking, but he was very sick.

GROSS. Do you remember an incident in 1945 when a prisoner was taken into the hospital with either a fractured skull or suffering a hemorrhage as a result of a blow on the head?

DR. SCHONFELD. No.

GROSS. During the period March 1 to April 30 did you see the records of all patients in that infirmary?

DR. SCHONFELD. I saw the records and I saw the patients.

At an interruption by Berger the doctor suddenly stood up. "I came 2,000 miles please," he said. "I would like to explain because this is my heart. I didn't come for money." His face was flushed and angry and his voice shook. Here again was the emotion brought on by trying to steel one's memory to the recall of horror.

When the tribunal had calmed him, Berger took over cross-examination. He got nowhere in shaking the doctor's testimony.

BERGER. Why do you remember Mittelman's name?

DR. SCHONFELD. He was like a leader insofar as he tried to keep the people a little bit in Jewish religion. You know, he gave sometimes a little moral talk, you know, a little courage to keep on.

BERGER. Why are you so positive Zalman did not die?

DR. SCHONFELD. It would not have escaped our attention, the SS attention. He couldn't die so secretly.

The issue was joined at last when Berger asked how Mittelman could have functioned as blockschreiber when he was bedridden. The doctor answered tersely:

"He wasn't a schreiber."

How was it possible to reconcile the testimony of Dr. Schonfeld to that of Rubenstein? On the stand both had shown the same controlled vehemence, a vehemence that seemed—almost beyond question—like honesty. Were they speaking of two different Mittelmans? Rubenstein's blockschreiber was an arrogant, vindictive man who made his own life easier by making his fellow prisoners miserable. Schonfeld's Mittelman was a religious, almost saintly man, who gave little "moral talks" and who, for the last two months of his imprisonment, had been dangerously ill.

The defense now kept its counterattack rolling. The next witness called was Rabbi Ezekiel Ruttner. He had been confined to the camp hospital himself and backed up the doctor's testimony. Ruttner knew of no man who had been brought into the hospital with a head injury. On cross-examination Lawyer Berger only led himself into a blind alley.

BERGER. Did you receive any special favors from Mittelman between August of 1944 and April of 1945?

RUTTNER. Yes.

BERGER. What were the favors?

RUTTNER. He told me I should not lose hope and that God will help and we shall be redeemed.

TRIAL CONTINUED

A WEEK passed now between the second and third sessions of the tribunal. For both Krieger and Mittelman it was much like any other week. Krieger and his wife worked hard in the little store in Brooklyn selling quantities of whitefish, carp and pike. In Olyphant, Mittelman worked in the packinghouse during the week and on the Sabbath led the congregation in the services. On Sunday morning he and his wife and two daughters got up early and, with some relatives from Scranton, drove the 135 miles to New York. They arrived at Stephen Wise Congress House shortly before Krieger, who had only a subway ride from Brooklyn. Because there were no kosher restaurants in the immediate neighborhood, some of the spectators came to the hearing carrying paper bags and cardboard boxes of food as if they were going on a picnic. The bearded rabbis, all sitting together in the second and third rows, whispered softly among themselves, their white hands fluttering rhythmically from the black sleeves of their coats.

Soon it was the plaintiff's turn again. Peter Stroh, a tall, pink-cheeked young man, was called to the stand. Holding his pork-pie hat in one hand, he looked like a college freshman, a boy who had never known anything worse than having his allowance cut off for a week. He had been in the forest camp at Mühldorf from July of 1944 until the liberation. He testified that, while there, he had been in the camp hospital with a case of frostbite.

BERGER. Was a certain doctor by the name of Dr. Schonfeld the head of the hospital?

STROH. No, he definitely was not.

He went on to testify he remembered the doctor but insisted that Schonfeld was only one of several doctors at the hospital. CHAIRMAN. Do you remember Mr. Mittelman from that camp?

STROH. Yes.

CHAIRMAN. Was he sick as far as you know?

STROH. As far as I know, he was not sick. He might have been. I don't know.

In his first questions on cross-examination, Lawyer Gross established the fact he apparently considered most damaging to Stroh's testimony: he was only 13 years of age when he was in the concentration camp. But, again under tribunal questioning, Stroh fortified one crucial point of the plaintiff.

CHAIRMAN. Do you remember whether you saw [Mittelman] every day at roll calls?

STROH. Yes, as far as I remember, I did.

CHAIRMAN. What was his function there?

STROH. Blockschreiber.

For all his youth, this witness's emotionless composure carried force and he had put Schonfeld's credibility to some question.

"I never raised my hand over a Jew"

NOW it was time for a long-awaited moment: Majer Mittelman was called and seated himself in the witness chair. His accuser, who throughout the session had prowled back and forth from the hearing room to the outer hall, came in and sat down. Mrs. Mittelman looked steadily down at her clasped hands. Speaking clear and rapid Yiddish—so rapid, in fact, that the translator had great difficulty keeping pace with him—Majer Mittelman told the tribunal that he had attended three Yeshivas (religious schools) in Czechoslovakia before the war and had been given his smichas (papers of rabbinical ordination). The Nazis, he said, had taken his smichas away, and he had never functioned in this country as a rabbi.

The rabbis on the tribunal began a line of questioning as a routine check of Mittelman's religious qualifications. Surprisingly they found that the accused showed a marked hesitancy and confusion when asked certain questions of religious law which, as a rabbi and a shohet, he should have known. For Mittelman this was a poor start with the tribunal.

Mittelman often turned and put his hand on the translator's arm and talked directly to him. They made a strange sort of bilingual duet, each looking at the other and nodding slowly as they spoke together, one in Yiddish, the other in English. Mittelman told of having worked his first two months in Mühldorf forest camp on an underground project. Then about October he had been taken off that work and put in another detail and in another block, one he remembered as being Block 8.

GROSS. Who was the blockschreiber?

MITTELMAN. There was no blockschreiber.

GROSS. Do you know Mr. Krieger?

MITTELMAN (shutting his eyes wearily). I got to know him the first time on June 20th on Lee Avenue, Brooklyn.

GROSS. Did you know Zalman Krieger?

MITTELMAN (shaking his head). Never heard of such a name.

TRIAL CONTINUED

GROSS. Mr. Mittelman, did you at any time, either four weeks or five weeks or six weeks before the liberation, strike anybody on the head in the food line at the evening meal?

MITTELMAN. I never raised my hand over a Jew. There were no non-Jews.

When Mittelman repeated Dr. Schonfeld's testimony that he had been ill in his barracks during this time, one of the rabbis on the tribunal picked up the questioning. Why, he asked, had Mittelman not gone to the hospital?

MITTELMAN. I knew what the result of being in the hospital was. . . . A woman doctor used to come with a higher-rank SS man. . . . They would suddenly come into the hospital and whoever appealed to her was taken from the bed and was sent to Dachau, and they are no longer on this earth. Therefore I asked Dr. Schonfeld . . . that [he] should have mercy on me.

In a little more than an hour Mittelman's entire defense had been presented. The only bad moment for the accused had come in the beginning, when the rabbis on the tribunal had questioned him about his religious education. But on the main issue he was firm. He did not even need time to reflect. His Yiddish, particularly when he was addressing the tribunal, was polished and confident.

Berger's cross-examination lasted close to six hours. It was tough, stereotyped legal bludgeoning, insinuating all possible indictment of Mittelman's character, including deception toward his own religious congregation. It did not change the accused's resolute defense.

But one of the rabbis in the tribunal now posed the obvious question.

RABBI FEDERBUSH. How do you explain that Mr. Krieger recognized you and asked you whether you were from Mühldorf?

MITTELMAN. I cannot answer that question. . . . There wasn't a Jew in the entire camp who didn't know me by the name of Majer. Majer the Rebbe [the religious one] . . . [They called me that] because in the morning every time I went to work I prayed, and in the evening when I came back from work I prayed, so they called me Majer the Rebbe.

His face bleak and drawn, Mittelman began slowly to tire under the hours of questioning. He started snapping his answers. Once, when Berger tried to trip him on something he had testified earlier, he protested, "I don't know what I said. I have been speaking for five hours already."

Suddenly, under the barrage of Berger's questions about camp routine, Mittelman admitted that "sometimes" he did check the food line.

BERGER. You just admitted under cross-examination that you participated in the duties of a blockschreiber. Is that right?

MITTELMAN. Checking the line was never done by the blockschreiber but only by those who were standing in line; whoever had a chance to be the first one, he was the one to make the check.

BERGER. Approximately how many times did you act in that capacity?

MITTELMAN. I don't know.

RABBI LOOKSTEIN. Mr. Mittelman, this is very important. You ought to try to recollect to the best of your memory how many times—once, twice, three times—10 times.

MITTELMAN. The rabbi should pardon me. If I wasn't tired . . . I tried to be the first one so I should get some soup first. Everybody got soup, everybody got a portion, but if you got there first it was better. RABBI LOOKSTEIN. How many times did that happen? MITTELMAN. I don't know. I never kept a record . . .

It was only a few questions later when Berger closed the ordeal with a crisp, "That is all." Majer Mittelman, after almost seven hours in the witness chair, shook hands with the translator, bowed and smiled at the tribunal members and walked back to his seat at the defense table. Benjamin Krieger, who explained to the tribunal that he had to open his fish market at 9 o'clock the next morning, got up and went home.

After six more witnesses had added nothing substantial to the testimony, Chairman Pfeffer stood up and called the hearings at an end. It was 12:45 a.m., Oct. 30. The sessions had taken three long days. The tribunal had heard the testimony of 14 people.

For the tribunal to judge the truth was a formidable task. All the evidence came from tortured memories of a time when horror itself had become monotonous. And all the testimony added up to seemingly irreconcilable conflict.

Was Mittelman a simple, holy man, madly assailed by another's twisted recollection of a fatal day? If so, it was an extraordinary chance impulse that led the fish dealer to single out for attack, on a sidewalk in Brooklyn, a man who—it turned out—had indeed been at Mühldorf at the time and had at least some authority in the camp. And was the strong confirming testimony from skeleton-like Jacob Rubenstein merely more fabrication? And was it not curious that a man so devout should, before the rabbis of the tribunal, seem so unlearned in his faith?

To indict Mittelman as the murderer seemed no easier. Seven witnesses testified to his illness at the time of the crime. For what conceivable reason could Dr. Schonfeld be lying? And not even one of Mittelman's eight witnesses had ever seen or heard of the dead man.

Last week the tribunal pronounced its verdict in a five-page document. They found Majer Mittelman not guilty, because of insufficient evidence.

The opinion was not unqualified. Absolving the accused of all guilt in Zalman Krieger's death, the tribunal nonetheless made it clear that they felt Mittelman had been untruthful on two occasions. First: he had been, in spite of his denials, a blockschreiber. Second: he was not, as he had stated in the beginning of his testimony, a duly ordained rabbi.

Speaking of Benjamin Krieger, the tribunal expressed belief in the complete sincerity of his accusation. They stated their certainty that his brother Zalman had died in a concentration camp, probably as the result of a beating. But they expressed the opinion that Krieger was mistaken in identifying Mittelman as his brother's killer. The blame for Zalman Krieger's death, and the deaths of millions like him, was laid where it belonged—to German Nazism.

So ended the beth din. In Brooklyn, Benjamin Krieger went on about his business. According to all the precepts of law and evidence and justice, he had been overruled. He was supposed to go on now and sell his fish and forget he had ever seen Majer Mittelman. Slow, simple Benjamin Krieger would never forget.

As for Majer Mittelman, his future in Olyphant was uncertain. He had been found innocent of Krieger's charge, but his religious qualifications had undoubtedly been somewhat discredited. Asked whether he intended to keep on in his present position, he said, "My friend, I am not running. If I would run, I would have run that first night."

TRIBUNAL HUDDLES near end of trial. Judges waited for a month after trial, studying testimony and deliberating, before delivering their verdict.

Gold-plated Fashions

In a season of elegant fashions and luxurious fabrics, the latest advance in gilding the American woman is a gleaming cloth that not only looks golden but is. By a new process, introduced by Frank Associates and first used commercially to gild Cellophane Christmas ornaments, a genuine 24-carat gold film is transferred like a decalcomania to fabrics and leather. It will not rub off or tarnish; it is also washable and water repellent, which makes it practical for raincoats and bathing suits. Its most extravagant use is in evening fashions like the dress shown above. With it are worn gold sandals whose soles are molded of one piece of leather that hugs the instep and toes without covering them (Delman, $38.95).

“I’ve found the secret for an inexpensive Christmas!” enthused Elsie, the Borden Cow

“How funny can you get, woman?” roared Elmer, the bull. “Ask the guy who pays the bills—ask me! Remember last year—”

“This year,” hastily soothed Elsie, “things will be different.”

“I’ll say they will!” raged Elmer. “Get out that gift list! I’m cutting it down to the bone!”

“Let me tell you my secret first!” begged Elsie. “This Christmas I’m going to give everybody gay boxes of delicious things to eat. For some, I’ll make exciting-looking holiday cakes and candies with Borden’s Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk. For others—”

“You’ll be until next Christmas making enough candies for all your friends,” jibed Elmer.

“Indeed, no!” protested Elsie. “You can make dozens of kinds of festive candies with Eagle Brand without even cooking ’em! And the speedy cookies you make with Eagle Brand—”

“What are you going to give folks like my boss who doesn’t eat cookies?” snapped Elmer.

“I’m sending cards telling them

NOT to prepare any Christmas egg-nog,” answered Elsie. “Then, on Christmas morning, you and the children and I will drop in on them with holly-decked bottles of rich, delicious Borden’s Eggnog.”

“Say, that’s a pretty good idea,” grudging Elmer.

“Pretty good?” grinned Elsie. “Borden’s Eggnog is wonderful! A rich, delicious holiday treat for the entire family! A creamy, rich blend of grand dairy products and taste-tingling flavors! What I call a good gift—if it’s Borden’s, it’s GOT to be good!”

BEAUTIFUL AS THEY ARE, MANY OF THESE
PEAS WON'T MAKE THE GREEN GIANT LABEL

Our neighbors up in Minnesota used to shake their heads.

"Here you are," they'd say, "growing what we'll admit is a finer pea from that selected seed of yours. And those newfangled notions of yours—like hiring scientists to tell just the hour when each field should be picked—they worked out pretty good, too."

"But, what gets us is—after all that, you go ahead and kick out so many of those peas as not being quite tender enough!"

Well, maybe we are too fussy, but we've got a point, too. We've never seen the day when women didn't want more Green Giant Brand peas than we could grow. Try a can tonight. We think you'll see why.

How tender is a pea? Green Giant scientists don't guess. This machine, known as the tenderometer, tells them exactly by shearing peas and measuring their resistance. This is only one of the tests for tenderness that Green Giant Brand peas must pass.

BAHA'I DELEGATES AND THEIR FAMILIES POSE FOR AN ANNUAL PICTURE ON THE STEPS OF THEIR ORNATE NEW TEMPLE

Baha'i

AN ODD-LOOKING TEMPLE OUTSIDE CHICAGO HOUSES A HIGH-MINDED FAITH

The nine-sided, dome-topped building above, which faces Lake Michigan near Chicago in Wilmette, Ill., is sometimes locally and irreverently referred to as "God's orange squeezer." Though odd looking, the structure houses a high-minded religion called Bahá'í, whose purpose is to unite under one God nine of the world's faiths (next page). Founded 87 years ago by a Persian mystic named Bahá'u'lláh, Bahá'í now has members in 78 countries of the world, 6,000 of them live in the U.S.

When the U.S. members met this year for their 42nd annual convention, they were especially happy to pose for the group portrait (above). Under construction since 1921, their temple is almost completed. Through the years its cost—about $2.5 million—has been met almost entirely by the U.S. membership, contributions from nonmembers being refused. When the Bahá'í members meet again next year, the temple will be finished inside as well as out.

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY, elected annually, has nine members. Two missed meeting—one was ill, the other touring Bahá'í work in Latin America. Chairman Paul Haney (center) is a Washington, D.C. economist.

RELIGION IS GEARED TO THE NUMBER NINE

Although the Bahá'í religion has no ritual or dogma, it attaches an overwhelming importance to the number nine, which, being the highest digit, symbolizes to Bahá'ís the coming of age of the human race. The faith is administered locally and nationally by nine-man governing bodies (above). The nine-sided temple sits in a nine-acre park. Bahá'ís believe God has been revealed by the prophets of several religions as shown here. Founder of one, the Sabaeen, the religion of Sheba, is unknown. Another religion, Babism, was succeeded by Bahá'í, which was founded by Bahá'u'lláh 87 years ago and was carried on into this century by his son 'Abdu'l-Bahá.

Life Tours with Sir Thomas BEECHAM JOURNEYS DOUGHTILY OVER U.S.

Like a character of Dickens, a little larger than life, a little gruffer-looking, sharper-tongued and gentler-hearted than anyone you would expect to meet in the world of reality, Sir Thomas Beecham, Bart. has embarked on a musical tour of the U.S. Leading the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra of London, England, which he formed and partly financed in 1946, he is appearing in 46 cities from Hartford down to New Orleans, up to Chicago and back to New York. By the time he is finished in mid-December, some 200,000 U.S. concertgoers will have had a look at the broad back and acrobatic gestures of this doughty champion of Old England.

Conducting and touring are both arduous businesses, but Sir Thomas at 71 takes them both in his stride. Fortified by the company of his wife and by heavy meals of regional cooking, he plunges from town to town, maintaining a furious pace of activity: making friends (left) in his majestic way; scolding the orchestra good-naturedly ("I don't care what you play, gentlemen, as long as you finish with me"); or facing up to the local press ("What did you think of the audience?" asked a lady interviewer in Jackson, Miss. "I didn't see," replied Sir Thomas. "My back was turned") and everywhere bringing the special superior Beecham brand of conducting, the verve and clarity and aristocratic ease and the pleasure he gets out of great music.

ON STAGE during rehearsal in New Orleans, Sir Thomas comes to a difficulty, hushes the violins, embarks on an explanation of what the players are supposed to be getting across in overture to Wagner's The Flying Dutchman. Explanations involve a number of grandiose gestures and a breaking into wild Wagnerian song.

AS A FAMILY MAN Beecham stands with rigorous British aplomb (left) to let sister-in-law into a cab, and sips orange juice contentedly (right) after lunching with his wife on buster crab and chicken creole. Sir Thomas disliked two things in New Orleans: the noise ("Niagara Falls!") and the jazz ("suicide music").

OFF STAGE Sir Thomas gets his hair cut in a Memphis hotel room (left); shows off his septuagenarian spryness as he puts on leather slippers to ease the terrible strain conducting puts on his feet (center); and lets a cooling Coke slowly dribble down his throat (right) before going back to stage to receive audience's applause.

AUTHENTIC DRAWING OF DODOS WAS RECENTLY FOUND IN ART GALLERY

NEW-FANGLED DODO

Long-lost life sketch turns up in Sacramento to give new information about long-dead bird

Dead as it is, the dodo has suddenly stirred up a new flurry of excitement. John Matthew, a Sacramento art gallery director, was visiting a San Francisco art show when he came across Dutch Artist Roelandt Savery's painting, Landscape with Birds, done in 1628. The dodo in the painting, until now the most authentic likeness, reminded Matthew of a drawing in his own gallery. He searched his files and came up with the Savery drawing above, a sketch the artist made of a live dodo brought to Holland in 1599 from the island of Mauritius, the dodo's last stronghold. The sketch, which had been lost for three centuries and filed namelessly under "Exotic Birds," corrected errors in Savery's painting done from memory years later. The new dodo had thicker shoulders, was covered mostly with fuzz rather than feathers and—most important of all—had webbed feet, which may lead excited ornithologists to reclassify the bird as aquatic rather than terrestrial. But to the dodo, which has been extinct since 1681, all this made very little difference.

MISCONCEPTIONS about the dodo arose from sketches like these made by travelers to Mauritius, an island in the Indian Ocean. Dutch sailors called Mauritius "Swan Island" because of the dodos and named the dodo Walgvogel, or "nauseating bird," because the longer it was cooked, the worse it tasted.

MOST AUTHENTIC dodo before new discovery was in Savery's painting, Landscape with Birds. Dodo weighed about 50 pounds, was 2 to 2½ feet high.

MOST FAMOUS dodo was drawn by John Tenniel for Alice in Wonderland. Alice's dodo arranged a "Caucus-race" in which everyone ran around in circles.

MOST REPULSIVE dodo is this sketch of preserved skull (top) in a museum in Oxford, England. Equally repulsive is artist's accompanying reconstruction.

We shot through clouds to get this mountain ghost

1 "It's like trying to hit a fly in a fog... shooting chamois goats in the Swiss Alps," writes an American friend of Canadian Club. "Shy and fast, the chamois scents you when you can't even see him. Just above Grindelwald, my guide finally spotted one on a cloudy peak 180 yards off. We were up-wind, my shot was right on target...but my chamois dropped clear out of sight!"

2 "Down at the bottom of a deep snow-filled ravine, after hours of search, we found the chamois. He'd tumbled a long way. To find my trophy and bring it down from the mountains took some real mountaineering...but it was worth every bit of the trouble."

3 "Anybody can wear the prized 'Gamsbart,' the hat ornament made of the chamois' chin-whiskers, but I could count myself among the proud few who are really entitled to wear it. For the local Swiss—and for me, too—it is a real badge of honor. Bagging a chamois is quite a feat for any hunter."

4 "That shot of yours rates another reward," the guide said that evening, "...the best in the house." And he brought out a bottle of my favorite whisky—Canadian Club!

5 "It takes luck to bag a chamois...and a good deal of patience. But it's more than a matter of luck that I find Canadian Club treasured everywhere I travel."

Why this worldwide popularity? Canadian Club is light as scotch, rich as rye, satisfying as bourbon—yet there is no other whisky in all the world that tastes quite like Canadian Club. You can stay with it all evening long...in cocktails before dinner and tall ones after. That's what made Canadian Club the largest-selling imported whisky in the United States.
